The Cabinet Dissension—The President's Policy—War Declared against the Times.

From Our Own Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, Monday, Dec. 13, 1858.

A serious misunderstanding has occurred among the Printing spoilsmen here. WENDELL has refused to comply with the demands of STRADMAN, who is nominal Printer to the House. Under the lex talionis the latter has placed his resignation in the hands of Mr. Cox, of Ohio, to be tendered Congress on the first opportunity. As WENDELL does the printing under STRADMAN, the latter's resignation blows up the concern. BANKS, of Virginia, it appears, has pocketed his portion of the spoils. WENDELL contends that STRADMAN is also overpaid, while STRADMAN claims several thousand dollars more. Should WENDELL satisfy this claim, the resignation will be withdrawn.

The bill providing for losses for the Creek Indian depredations is the special order for Friday.

The Committe of Ways and Means are ready to report the Military Academy and Pension Appropriation bills.

A curious question is being discussed here in diplomatic circles. The President, in his Message, refers to Mr. FORSYTH as "our late Minister to Mexico." The friends of the Ex-Minister maintain that he has not been removed nor recalled from his Legation, but that he brought the Legation away from Mexico with him, in consequence of the insulting conduct of the Zuloaga Government.

It is now claimed that when diplomatic relations are resumed with Mexico, Mr. FORSYTH is the American Minister, and that no other can be appointed until he resigns or is removed. There would be no embarrassment in all this, if Mr. F. was not anxious to hold on until he has made a treaty of some sort to signalize his mission, and it is exceedingly doubtful whether Mr. BUCHANAN can pluck up courage to remove him. Except for the constitutional timidity of the Executive, Mr. F. would have been peremptorily recalled a year ago. That is no secret in well posted quarters here.

In no event is it probable that Mr. FORSYTH will be permitted to return to Mexico as Minister, for he is disliked by the Liberals, should they obtain the Government, and has already quarreled with the Opposition. It is doubtful whether any new Minister to Mexico will be sent out soon, even if the United States should recognize the Liberal Government at an early day.

A movement is already on foot for the calling of State Conventions of Douglas men in New-York, Pennsylvania, and all the North-Western States, to be held early next Spring. Mr. DOUGLAS' friends foresee that if he relies upon the Charleston Convention alone to sustain and indorse his claims to the Presidential nomination, he is certain to be swindled out of it; but they believe that by the concerted action thus suggested, they can carry him to Charleston with such strength as will force his nomination from that body.

Mr. ALLEN, Clerk of the House of Representatives, is about to remove one of his employes, who was appointed out of compliment to the late J. GLANCY JONES. The friends of the politically defunct must give way to the more pressing claims of the living.

The Executive mandate has gone forth against the TIMES! Why had you not the fear of such consequences before your eyes? Your pungent expositions of the President's double dealing have pierced his cuticle, and excited his fearful wrath. Per consequence, the order has been issued to exclude the TIMES and its Correspondents from all Executive avenues of information! Are you not overwhelmed with gratitude? There is no longer danger of your trusting to Executive assurances of fairness, while the plans for cheating and defrauding you are matured and carried into execution.

Mr. BUCHANAN will admit of no competition in his new rôle of "newsboy." He is clearly determined to do his best to fill the orders of his New-York organ. The country has cause of congratulation; for if the President only persists a little while in efforts to compete with the intelligent enterprise of the TIMES, everybody must see that the attempt will incidentally develop in him those qualities of energy, boldness and decision, which he so dismally lacks, and which are so essential to the discharge of his secondary duties—to the public.

In the meantime we have exceeding consolation in the reflection that the TIMES and its readers will not suffer,—and that the anticipated good can be achieved without other sacrifice than of the Executive honor and dignity—a mere trifle, in the present instance. Your correspondents never had any facilities from the Executive. Anything of the kind would have been false to his bargain with a journal which had lashed him into subserviency, and so sought to make up for its loss of reliance on its own enterprise.

Your Washington news has been obtained in spite of the Executive, rather than by his aid: and your columns show how little you have suffered by this condition of affairs. Let Mr. BUCHANAN do his worst and the position of the TIMES is in no degree changed. Your readers may be sure of their daily dish of all the important intelligence from Washington, just as regularly as though the President had abandoned the business of peddling messages and other Executive favors, in exchange for fulsome and deceptive adulation.

I understand that the members of the British Legation here, confidently assert the purpose of the British Government to construct a railroad from the headwaters of the Saskatchewan river to the waters of the Pacific in the Fraser's river region. Three gentlemen connected with the Canadian Government, started for London, upon this business, several weeks ago.

NATHAN SARGENT denies the statement that he has issued secret circulars calling a Convention of friends of Senator CRITTENDEN, to meet in this city on the 15th inst., for the purpose of consulting in relation to bringing that gentleman forward as a candidate for the Presidency. It is admitted, however, that it is designed to have such a consultation among gentlemen who happen to be here at that time, which is substantially the same thing.

The bitterness with which the President continues the war against DOUGLAS, is not likely to confine its operations to Washington; and there is little doubt that every effort is making, and will be made, here, to insure his defeat before the Legislature of Illinois, as a candidate for reëlection. It is fully apparent that there can be no truce between DOUGLAS and BUCHANAN. One or the other must be broken down before the contest can end.

Will the Cabinet break up? The question is asked every hour here, by gentlemen who concur in your views of the anomalous relations which the President and Mr. COBB bear towards each other. It is no secret, now, that the President desired to interpolate his advocacy of specific duties into the Treasury Report—that Mr. COBB absolutely refused to permit anything of the kind, and that Mr. BUCHANAN swore the big oath that it should be done or Mr. COBB should go out.

In such a contest, of course, the Secretary triumphed. If he had resigned and so ended the squabble, it would have relieved the President amazingly. But Mr. COBB don't belong to the school of resigning politicians. Indeed, resignation is the only Christian virtue in which the Secretary is notoriously deficient. Besides, he thoroughly understands his chief, and he knew, therefore, that the chances were an hundred to one against his removing a Cabinet officer for anything less than murder. So bold a step requires nerve.

The result is that the President and his Secretary stand looking each other in the eyes, like a couple of belligerent game cocks, who have pecked away at one another until both are out of wind, and are waiting to see which of them is to make the next dash. COBB's friends are jubilant.

The Court of Claims has intimated a decision which, if persisted in, must make that tribunal the merest mockery. The facts are as follows: After the burning of San Francisco, in 1851, the Government of the United States agreed to rent a certain building, about to be put up, for the purposes of a Bonded Warehouse, provided it should be erected in accordance with certain stipulations. A Mr. SOPRANIS, with whom the contract was made, erected the building, and subsequently sold it and his contract to a Mr. CROSS, the assignment to whom was accepted and acknowledged by the Government. The building was occupied and the rent paid during two years and a half. Then the Secretary annulled all the San Francisco contracts made by his predecessor, including the one above described; and subsequently, although the Government retained the building for months, they refused to pay any rent, because of the order of annulment.

Suit was brought before the Court of Claims, to obtain the rent due, and damages arising out of the annulment. The Solicitor for the Government finding no ground upon which to question the claim, admitted the contract to have been valid, and the only question made before the Court, therefore, was as to the amount of the damages to be awarded. The Court, after hearing argument, retained the papers during eight months, and have just intimated that, notwithstanding the contract, the assignment and the proof of ownership all come from the Treasury Department officially to the Court, that, the signatures of all the parties to these papers must be proven before the Court, by the original parties. That is to say, if John Smith is witness to a note, the genuineness of which is not disputed, John Smith's signature as a witness must be proven by his own oath, even though John Smith be dead! Surely such a proposition cannot be maintained. It is too absurd even for a Congressional committee of investigation.

The Navy Department has awarded to JAMES MURPHY & Co., of New-York, the contract for constructing new boilers for the United States steamer San Jacinto. The boilers are to be of diverse styles, with a view of testing the comparative merits of the Martin boiler and another.

WASHINGTON, Monday, Dec. 13.

It seems to be conceded that the Committee on Foreign Relations, in the House at least, will mature no measures nor report any recommendations in support of the policy developed in the President's Message in relation to Spain, Cuba or Central America. Indeed, the impression gains ground that Mr. BUCHANAN is not sincere in the enunciation of this policy, and that nothing would disappoint him more than to find his recommendations acted upon. The supposition certainly is in strict keeping with the Buchanan character. A year ago, as you will remember, the Message intimated a desire upon the part of the President to have the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty abrogated. True, he did not say in direct terms that he wanted it abrogated, but he came as near to it as his constitutional inability to do anything by direct means would admit. A little later, when Mr. CLINGMAN, of North Carolina, made a bold and earnest effort to second the hinted wishes of the Executive, behold every friend of the President's on the Committee of Foreign Relations, as well as many others, were found in direct opposition to the Clayton-Bulwer abrogation. This year we see that Mr. BUCHANAN has entirely changed his views of this subject, now that Congress may be ready to take him at his word. These vacillations are significant, and well worthy of being noted.

So, too, in regard to Cuba. There is good reason to suppose that Mr. BUCHANAN begins to see that he has let the opportunity for the acquisition of the island pass, and that he must fail in the great project upon which he relied to signalize his Administration. To cover his own defeat becomes important,—for he has taken so little pains to conceal his anticipations of success, and to vaunt his power to command it, that defeat involves humiliation and disgrace. But how to cover up the failure, required a man of Mr. BUCHANAN's peculiarly diplomatic turn of mind to decide. He foresees that Congress will not repose extraordinary power in his hands, or place any considerable sum of money within his control; so he asks for both, and thus throws the responsibility from his own shoulders to those of Congress. His Message is intended to gain him the credit of being ready to take Cuba anyhow, without involving him in any more dangerous responsibility. His language to the public ear of Congress is: "Gentlemen, I'm in earnest in my Cuban recommendations; now, if you are in earnest, let me have the money to put the game through;" but to himself he says: "That's deucedly well done; they won't let me have the money, of course, and so I can be brave as I please, without a fear." If Congress should happen to vote the ten millions and the extraordinary powers, I verily believe Mr. BUCHANAN would abdicate, and give us a "second-hand President" in the person of Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, for the remainder of the term.

It is suggested, as a reason why Mr. COBB is not removed from the position of Secretary of the Treasury, that the President expects Mr. COBB's friends in Congress to give a negative support (by failing to vote at all) to some proposition for modifying the tariff, whereas if he were to be removed, every Southern vote would be cast in opposition. It is difficult to believe that any such expectation can be well founded; for if Mr. COBB, single-handed and alone, can flout his chief in the face, with impunity, there is little probability that fifty Representatives will see any special necessity for succumbing to Mr. BUCHANAN's wishes.

The proprietor of the Union accepts, as leveled at him, a statement made by your correspondent the other day, to the effect that some one here had withheld certain moneys from the party to whom they were due, upon the ground that the President had ordered them expended in influencing certain State elections. My paragraph certainly named nobody, nor have I in conversation anywhere made the slightest allusion connecting the proprietor of the Union with the transaction aforesaid. Under the circumstances, the public will be very apt to draw an inference, accepting the Union's denial as an admission of the fact charged. But let that pass for the present. That this charge has been made against the President, in the presence of several different persons, I have no more doubt than I have that it is true. Soon as I can verify the facts, I shall probably have more to say upon this point, and perhaps be under the necessity of giving some incidental facts not altogether creditable to another high officer of the Government, or to a member of Congress quite near the President—facts, however, for the existence of which the latter functionary is clearly responsible.

It has been stated that Col. FORNEY was here to arrange for the rejection of J. GLANCY JONES' nomination as Minister to Austria. The statement I believe to be erroneous. At any rate, there is no probability that Mr. JONES will experience any difficulty in securing confirmation. Personally, he is unobjectionable, and his family are decided and deserved favorites in Washington society. Even if the Douglas Democrats could be induced to vote against him, it is far from probable that the Republicans would join them en masse, which would be necessary to insure his defeat. Whatever may be said or thought of the policy of his appointment, there are few members of the Senate, I am sure, who are ready for so ungracious an act as his rejection would involve.

Secretary THOMPSON has decided, at last, to give the Indian Bureau contract for Dry Goods and Blankets to S. B. CHITTENDEN & Co., of your City. The bids for this contract were hung up for a week or two because of a singular and somewhat novel question. The lowest bidders were CHITTENDEN & Co., and CRONIN, HURXTHAL & Co., both of New-York; and the id of the first-named house was lowest of these, provided the Department recognized as binding and certain a memorandum at its foot, throwing off a stated per centum from the pieces specifically demanded for the various items of the bill. The Indian Bureau, in accordance with the precedents, recommended that CHITTENDEN's bid be thrown out for "uncertainty,"—that is to say, that the bid be considered as though the per centum reduction of price on the whole bill had not been noted at its foot. Secretary THOMPSON very justly decided that the Chittenden bid would get the Indians the most goods for the least amount of money,—and accordingly, overruling very bad precedents, accepted it, with the condition that the bidders should put the stipulations of their contract in such shape that there could be no mistake ab to its meaning. The act of independence in the present instance is more worthy of note, because CRONIN & Co., who are old contractors, constitute a Democratic House,—while CHITTENDEN & Co. have the credit of entertaining rather a darker shade of political sentiments.

The bill for the creation of the Territory of Arizona will come up in the House for decision some time this week, in all probability. Its success is due to the people of that distant and unprotected region, and the sentiment of Congress now seems to be decidedly as justly in its favor. Mr. OTERO, the delegate from New-Mexico, who has heretofore opposed the proposition, now gives it a hearty support. S.

[FROM THE REPORTER FOR THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

WASHINGTON, Monday, Dec. 13.

The reporter of the Associated Press is enabled to state with confidence that Lord NAPIER has been transferred to the Mission at the Hague. He will not leave Washington until the arrival of his successor in two months. This change involves no imputation on Lord NAPIER's conduct, nor any alteration of policy on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

The Delegate from Utah has received from Governor CUMMING and other officials of that Territory, certificates that the Public Library and the Court Records are in good conservation, which statement is contrary to the newspaper reports so often repeated.

The President has called upon Congress to extend to Siam the provisions of the act of 1848, now in operation with China and Turkey, conferring on American Ministers and Consuls certain judicial powers to be exercised in cases where our countrymen are involved. The Treaty with Siam renders such an enactment necessary.

Commodore MCINTOSH has been condemned by a Medical Board on account of sickness and ordered home.

Mr. STRADMAN has written his resignation as public printer of the House, but withholds sending it in for the present.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WASHINGTON, Monday, Dec. 13.

The House resumed the consideration of the Judge Watrous impeachment case.

JOHN COCHRANE, of New-York, argued from the evidence to show the complicity of Judge WATROUS in land speculation, and that the House should inquire into his conduct with a view to further proceedings.

Mr. CLAY, of Kentucky, offered a resolution, which was adopted, requesting the President, if not inconsistent with the public interests, to communicate to the House all the information in his possession, or which may shortly come into his possession, regarding the recent reported boarding, by British naval officers, of American vessels in the Gulf of Mexico.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Louisiana, contended that it was the duty of the House to accuse Judge WATROUS of high crimes and misdemeanors and call on the Senate for his trial.

Mr. MAYNARD, of Tennessee, insisted there was nothing whatever to justify such proceeding.

Mr. ADRAIN, of New-Jersey, contended there was sufficient evidence on which to find a bill of impeachment.

Mr. HOUSTON, of Alabama, said he would endeavor to obtain a vote on the pending subject to-morrow afternoon. Adjourned.

The Yacht Wanderer and Her Cargo of Africans.

SAVANNAH, Monday, Dec. 13.

The Republican of this morning says that the yacht Wanderer positively landed Africans near Brunswick. Mr. JOSEPH GANAHL, the District Attorney, arrived on Saturday with three men believed to be implicated. Their names are JUAN BT. RAJESTA, N. A. BROWN and MIGUEL AGINOI or RAQUAT, hailing from New-Orleans. Mr. GANAHL refused to take bail for their appearance at Court, and the prisoners were lodged in jail on the charge of piracy. Mr. GANAHL is using every exertion to obtain evidence, and has sent to Brunswick to elicit information. The examination will probably take place on Thursday. A tug was dispatched to Brunswick to tow the Wanderer to Savannah, but the shipmaster aboard refused to give her up. It is reported that the Collector of Darien states that the Wanderer has no appearance of having had slaves on board.

The Republican says it is rumored that the Africans were landed on Gekyl Island, and that a steamer which left Savannah took one hundred and fifty, and conveyed them past Savannah to the river plantations, and from thence they were scattered through the country. The cargo shipped is said to have consisted of 350 negroes. The Wanderer hails from St. Helena; is without regulyr papers, as there is no American Consul there, but has informal papers from native officials, without any seals attached.

Passenger Travel by the Overland Mail Route—The Memphis Line.

ST. LOUIS, Monday, Dec. 13.

The passengers by the Overland Mail state that so great was the rush for seats that the applicants adopted the course of deciding by lot who should take passage. Upward of 100 applications were made this trip, and as high as $100 premium was offered for seats.

The Gila River Mines are yielding largely. Emigrants are flocking in from all quarters, and the excitement along the route is intense.

No hostile Indians were seen, and the previous rumors of depredations are denied.

Mr. PARDEE, the expressman having in charge the President's Message, was met four miles this side of Fayetteville, Arkansas, about twelve hours ahead of time. This is the worst part of the whole route. He would abandon the coach at Fayetteville, and proceed by daylight on horseback until physically exhausted, when some employee of the Company would take the documents and push onward with all possible dispatch.

Colonel BUTTERFIELD and family have arrived here. The Colonel proceeds to Fort Smith, with the design of putting the Memphis Branch of the Overland Mail route in effective operation, and also to inspect portions of the main line, with a view to facilitate the transmission of the mails and passengers. It is reported that he contemplates changing the present service to a tri-weekly one.

They waded some rods in water five feet deep to reach the land. None of them have yet been recaptured.

THE NEW-HAVEN DIVORCE CASE.

BENNETT vs. BENNETT.

From Our Own Reporter.

NEW-HAVEN, Monday Night.

This piquant cause was resumed to-day at half past ten o'clock in the morning, and except an intermission of an hour for dinner, occupied the time until half past six in the evening.

Dr. Bennett took the stand and testified as follows:

I was always for trying to make peace in the house, and one way to secure it, I thought, would be, and the best way, to call upon our Heavenly Father by the way of prayer; we always had a number of bibles in the house, and one of them I would take and read a chapter in in the morning, get my little children around me and my wife, after which I would raise my voice heavenward for protection; one or two mornings went on this way; I then got two little church music books—Congregational, I think—and after we had read a chapter I would invite my wife to sing a tune before prayer; she refused to do it, and after that she refused entirely to meet me in the morning for prayer, and the little children would follow her away, and this ended the matter entirely; I think she says that the reason that she does not meet me was on account of my swearing immediately after prayers; there is no truth whatever in the assertion; as to my using improper language, I doubt whether there is any one in this room that has heard me use profane language for the past six months, for the past year, for the past two years; as to the swearing and scolding before the children, she very well knows that I have always told her, when she was angry at me, or fretting at me before the children, that I begged her to stop, if for no other reason than for the children's sake.

One morning as I came from down-town, I think I was coming up from down town, as I came into the hall door—by the by our bedroom door is within one step from the head of the stairs, a step or a half will fetch you to the bedroom door—as I took the first step or two up-stairs, as I came into the hall door, I saw a flash of light from my bedroom door, there being no lights around only from the doors, I saw the flash of light from the door, and then the person of a man coming down the stairs, and met about half-way; he goes down, and by the time he gets out the hall door, I am to the door—the bedroom door; I try to open the door, but it is locked; Mrs. Bennett opens the door carefully, and just looked through a little ways, she having nothing but her underskirts on; being rather confused, she says, "That you—why! was you there ten or fifteen minutes ago?" she says that she locked it because the children bothered her, and this gentleman that went out of the room was Joseph Sheldon.

I was always very much against having the girls sew in my bedroom, and have ordered them out a great many times, but they would come back again; I have told them if they would not go out—though I told them where they could go, there were plenty rooms, down stairs, the kitchen, the dining-room, the sitting-room, the two parlors there, if they did not go down—I should certainly arrange my dress as I thought proper in their presence, and anything else that I saw proper to do; they would go down at first, and after a little while come back again; Mrs. B. would tell them, do not mind me—to stay there just as much as they were a mind to; she told them this before me, and she would tell the servants frequently not to pay any attention to what I said, and if I said anything about the orders not to pay any attention to what I said, but to get what they were a mind to.

She says she has frequently asked me for money, and she certainly has, and I have very, very frequently, very often given it to her—but she certainly was not satisfied at that, and told me if I did not let her have it sometimes when I have refused, there was one way of getting it, and she could adopt that way, that she would take a certain way with young fellows; she has often told her power, her influence, and that way was that which was in the power of woman, and it was, and she should raise the devil with me; she invites from New-York, from this house of Mrs. N., one of them, a woman that was kept by a broker down town, as she told me—Mrs. Gill—I gave the name the other day; she invites her to our house, she stays there one or two nights; I believe it was the next day or the day or two after, two men followed her up, strangers to me. One of these men was a married man, she told me, ("she," means Mrs. Bennett,) but paid this woman's expense, (Mrs. Gill's,) at the house of Mrs. Newman. There was another one of bad character from this house, that Mrs. Bennett invited up, and this one she has sent in my bedroom, to influence me from my innocent ways. One of these gentlemen or men——

Mr. Blackman—We want the name of that woman.

Witness—Sarah Newman.

Judge Blackman—His cousin! his cousin!

Witness—The youngest one of those two men that came up, wishes Mrs. B., as Mrs. B. tells me, to leave me and elope with him.

Mrs. B——

Mr. Blackman—The names of the two men?

Witness—I can, if I think a little while; but I can't recollect them now, if I should stand an hour.

Mr. Blackman—Let him stand, then.

Witness—I can give them after——

Mr. Blackman—I think, your honor, that so much study and reflection on such a point of names, may embarrass us.

Judge Waldo—There is force in that suggestion; he ought to describe them.

Witness—One was a very large, fine, elegant looking man, splendid, beautiful-looking man; that was the married man.

Judge Waldo—Let him give some definite description; there are many splendid men in the world. What was the color of his hair?

Witness—Very dark, full face, very splendid moustache, a little over a medium size; quite tall, rather large, about the size of our Hon. Mr. Blackman, but better looking; the other was an ordinary-sized man, and no better looking than I am; his hair didn't stick up like mine, but rather laid down; think he did not have a moustache, but he had on the Housatonic line—[stopped;] I think he told me in her presence—he told me he had a marble quarry up the other end of it somewhere—and this was the one that wanted Mrs. B. to leave me and elope with him; I cannot recall the name of either; the large man she told me was a broker; many times, in one of her fits of anger, she would say, "Why do you want to live with me when you know that I hate you so;" she has often wished me to make my will, and as often, perhaps as often, wanted me to get my life insured; but the life insured I thought no one would do that that knew what danger I stood in; as regards the will, I have often told her I did not wish to make my will—did not want one; for I did not choose to give what little I had to any one but my family; this I told her a good many times; I didn't know anything about law; neither did I ever go to a lawyer until she talked about divorce; never went to a lawyer; never was in a Court-room that I know of; I told her that I couldn't see any use in making a will, for I thought it must necessarily go to my wife and children, and there is where I wanted it to remain after my death, for I loved my little family; I did not pretend to have over—very much to leave, but told her I should have something, and said, "Now, Mary, I'm glad that I've got what little I have," naming over the house we lived in, in a very pleasant place, and the one at the foot of the garden, and the other one right across the street, right opposite that. This was all the property I had of land property, excepting half of a lot in the old cemetery. But that was not exactly what she wanted, for she had told me a number of times that there was a poor class of people lay around there, and she did not want to lay among them, and it did not take long for her to talk me out of anything. I was always easily led by her, and so this Mr. Beecher, not the wife, but this Mr. B. she spoke of, saying that I played sick one time and took medicine so as not to see company, he came; he had very poor luck in raising his little family, and his first child, after a few months or a year or two died. If I recollect right, it was buried, and he came to me and says, "Well Dr. ——

Mr. Blackman—Well, is that proper? what was said does not make it proper—

Witness—I bought another lot, pretty lot, with him, to have his child buried in, prettily fenced around with an iron fence, and thought it would be very much better for my little family.

Judge WALDO suggests that this was very remote and ought not to consume time.

Witness—Didn't intend to be sick so as to avoid Mrs. Beecher; she has a good many times told me that she has hated me, and that she wished I was poisoned, and that she would poison me; I never threatened to poison her, never; but many times when we would have some little drinks, as we would have strawberries done up, I would take them, one by one, and add a little water to them, and it would make a beautiful drink; would fix two or three goblets and pour them full, and hand to her, and she would refuse to take it, and say, "What have you put in it?" none of you can tell the feelings of my heart; would sup a little, not to show her anything particular, but to show her how nice it was, and she would then take it and drink it, and say, as I had told her, it was very nice.

She has told you that when we left the harbor for Cuba—

Mr. Dutton—When you have showed your affection in any way, how has she met it?

A.—When I have tried, and at times when she was—seemed to be pleasant around, I would go up and talk very pleasantly to her, but she would not seem to notice me, and the more affectionate and kind I was towards her, the more she would show her ill-feeling and hatred towards me.

She says while going out the harbor of Cuba—

Mr. Dutton—She says that you sent her down to get the tickets.

Mr. Watrous—She says that you feigned sickness in order to get her to go?

Witness—I was in bad health for some time, and went to recover my health; prior to that they were talking about the divorce and got them fellows up there to my house, and confused me and got away my property, and those and many other things connected with it had much to do with my health, and all along my married life up to that time, I was a very industrious man, and always minded my own business; I did ask her if she would go and secure the tickets, or to see about it, and she was perfectly willing to go, and I don't know whether she got the tickets or whether I or my father went down for them, but she did go down to see about it.

When we were out of Sandy Hook, sailing for Cuba in a steamer, we both were on the deck, when the steamer stopped to let out the pilots; in a few moments the rocking of the steamer caused us both to go down and take our berths, and we were very sick indeed; had as much as I possibly could do in assisting Mrs. B.—in holding proper things, and aiding her all I could, and was just as bad off as she was; but it was necessary for me to stand in the state-room to attend to her and let myself alone, but was glad to do this to assist her, but thought at that time—[Stopped.]

I done this for three or four days, for three or four days I was sick, and think she did not come out from bed until the end of the fourth day, and she says after we got out of the harbor I wanted to act improperly; I deny it; we stayed within the walls of Havana for some six or seven weeks, at a hotel kept—we went to a hotel first, stayed a week, I think, and the accommodation was not what we wanted, and we found a better place near by, and went to that and stayed there some six weeks, more or less; we still had our separate places of rest, all the time we were in Cuba, being just the same as it had been for a long time before we started for Cuba. As my object in going to Cuba was for my health, and as it was not improving any in the city of Havana, I told my wife that it would be necessary for me to go into the interior, in the country, to secure a place for the remainder of the time we stayed at Cuba; took the cars one day—

Gov. Dutton—Tell us about your leaving her in the care of Mr. Gardner?

A.—There was a Mr. Gardner and his mother staying at the hotel, and the mother was a fine old looking lady, who had brought up, I think she told me, a large family of children, and was very much thought of in the house, and was somewhat interested in the house; when I started for the interior, it was in the hall that Mr. G., Mrs. B., and Mr. G.'s mother, together with myself, were standing; I told Mrs. G. I wish she would; I think I may perhaps have said to Mr. G. that I wished him to make it pleasant to my wife—but the mother was standing there between times—I said to her, "Mrs. Gardner, I am going up in the country, to see if I could find a place, and now won't you be a mother to my wife?" I went up——

Gov. Dutton—She spoke of your putting her in the care of some gentlemen; had you been out promenading? A.—I could not talk the Spanish language, and as I was very anxious that Mrs. B. should enjoy herself while there, I would invite Mr. Gardner to walk out with us, but I would always take the best side while walking down there, and that was by my wife; and we walked down most every evening to the square fronting the Captain General's residence; this this square was a very beautiful place, and there was always music in front of the General's house—a band—a large band between the hours of eight and nine o'clock, and it seemed as if the whole people of the city had collected together there to hear the beautiful music and to promenade. I was very fond of music, and could not hear very well, and after being there one or two evenings, the guards saw me holding my hand up to my ear, and invited me up to the music. I would ask Mr. G. if he would walk around the square; it was always in my sight—it was beautiful moonlight—with my wife; she would make no objection, and was quite pleased. I told him that I could not understand Spanish, and I wished him to inform her of all the phrases.

Q.—Did she make any objections to that? A.—Not at all, she was rather pleased with it, quite pleased with it.

Q.—Will you state whether you did this with a design to ill-treat your wife? A.—No it was with a good design; I loved her and I wished her to enjoy herself, and I studied the best way for her to enjoy herself.

Q.—She states that before you went down to the country there you proposed that she should come up alone to where you wanted to go. State what conversation took place, if any. A.—I went up in the country twice; the first time the sugar mills were not in operation.

Q.—Did you ever propose to her to go up alone, and, if you did, why? A.—The second time I went up there they were ready, and I wrote to Mrs. Bennett that on account of my health—perhaps I may not have written that—that was one cause, and the next cause was that it would be pretty expensive, as they generally charged for a pleasure party going out there eight dollars, and she would not have to get out of the car from the time she went in until the time she landed, and I should meet her at the dépôt; therefore it was my wish that she should come up without my going after her, but she did not come up, and I returned to Havana and we went up together; we had a very comfortable place there in the country; all that we could wish, and they all made it pleasant for us; we used to ride out most every evening; we would go in parties of eight, ten or a dozen on horseback, and this was a party which consisted in the family, generally; I suppose they had some thirty horses, more or less, and we would visit the different estates around, and we all enjoyed ourselves very much while we were there; we stayed there—

Counsel (interrupting)—She complains that on one occasion when you went out riding, you went back, and left her with one gentleman of the company? A.—I went back one time; there were several riding out, and we got a little ways on—not very far—but the trotting of the horse gave me a pain in my breast, and I could not go any further and I returned.

Q.—Tell whether she knew that you went back, and all the circumstances. A.—I cannot say that she knew; I don't recollect, but I think she must have known, for we all trotted together, and generally kept quite close together when we went out.

Q.—Do you recollect whether she galloped off with one of the party? (No answer.)

Q.—When she returned, did she make any complaint about your having left her? A.—She did; she made a complaint, and all she said was that she got off some by-road.

Q.—Did she make any complaint to you because you did not keep on with them? A.—I told them why I did not; I don't know as there was anything more said; I can't recollect anything more.

Q.—What occurred after that? A.—She said that I annoyed her.

Counsel—We are now on the subject of Cuba; go on with that.

Witness—We returned from there (from the plantation to Havana) with the intention of taking the first steamer home to New-York; I believe the steamer was to start next day; we put up at the same hotel, and it so happened, and I was glad of it, that we could not get the same room as we had before, for they were single beds in that, and the only room we could have was one that had a double one in it; it might as well have been a single bed though, finally—[laughter]—it might as well—(dolefully)—have been a single one.

Q.—State what occurred in Havana before you returned? A.—I had got out of money before I started from the plantations; I had just enough to pay my passage from the plantation to Havana; I wrote down to a shipping merchant there or an express man, sending a check to New-

ENGLISH AFFAIRS.

Effect of the Montalembert Trial on English Opinion—Speculation About the Ministry, &c., &c.

From Our Own Correspondent.

LONDON, Friday, Nov. 26, 1858.

The all-engrossing topic of the day is the trial and sentence of M. MONTALEMBERT. Although no account of the proceedings has been permitted to transpire through the columns of the Paris press, and although threatening orders were issued to all who obtained tickets of admission that they should not dare to make a note of what took place in Court, our habitual confidence in the vigilance and tact of those who gather news abroad for the English public, led to a general belief on this side of the Channel that we should not be left wholly in the dark as to what occurred on this most interesting occasion. Nor has public expectation been disappointed. Copies of the Daily News were eagerly sought after this morning when it became known that its pages contained a graphic sketch of the scandalous sham trial of Wednesday last. The police agents of despotism may interdict note-books, but they cannot prevent the human memory from preserving clear and indelible records of the judicial crimes, and whose perpetration they assist. The use of pen and pencils may be denied to the favored few who are permitted to witness the mockery of legal investigation; but truth will out, and justice, as with a pencil of light, will inscribe the vindication of her insulted honor.

It is impossible to conceive a stronger feeling of popular indignation than that which is everywhere expressed against the French Government for its palpable abuse of power in the present instance. As a zealous Catholic, M. DE MONTALEMBERT'S name is not one particularly calculated to enlist general sympathy: and the recollection of the reactionary lengths to which he had gone in 1849 and 1850, when in the National Assembly he declaimed with vehemence against the democratic party, naturally checked feelings of solicitude in the breasts of many politicians in his behalf. There has been, moreover, the remembrance that the inculpated statesman was one of the very few men of his class who consented to take office after the coup d'etât—an error which he only redeemed in part by renouncing his senatorship some month later, on the Princes of the House of Orleans being stripped of their private property by an Imperial decree. All these considerations have nevertheless been submerged and almost extinguished in the sentiment of indignation which the indictment of M. MONTALEMBERT, under an exceptional law, and his trial by an inferior tribunal of police without the protection of a jury, has kindled. It is now notorious that urgent remonstrances were addressed to the Emperor against the folly of the proceeding, not only by M. PERSIGNY and Prince NAPOLEON JEROME, but by many of his intimate friends in this country. Lord PALMERSTON makes no secret of the advice he gave while at Compiègne, and the expostulation by letter of his veteran friend and confidant, Lord BROUGHAM, is said to have been worthy of better days.

All however was destined to prove vain. LOUIS NAPOLEON has long cherished a deep grudge against the Count for his renunciation of office on the occasion I have above referred to. He has besides evinced, on more than one occasion, a feminine inveteracy of dislike for every man who is supposed to possess an independent position of political influence in France inimical to his dynasty; and a story is told that, after listening to a long and earnest argument in favor of abandoning prosecution from a distinguished and disinterested adviser, he observed calmly: "I cannot afford to let such an opportunity slip." It was the same unpitying and blind selfishness that impelled his uncle to kidnap and to kill the Duc D'ENGHIEN. The same generous and honest deprecations were addressed to the first NAPOLEON by MURAT and others on that memorable occasion, and the same infatuation appears to have animated NAPOLEON III. M. MONTALEMBERT is said to have appealed to a superior tribunal; there is obviously an object to gain in keeping up the excitement regarding his accusation as long as possible. Nobody believes that there is any legal technicality involved on which the conviction is likely to be set aside, but many are disposed to believe that the Emperor will make a show of magnanimity by remitting the whole or chief portion of the sentence of imprisonment. The truth is that such remission is of comparatively little importance, for under the provisions of the law passed immediately after ORSINI'S attempt of the 14th January, any person who has been convicted of a political offence becomes liable to be deported without trial by the mere mandate of the Emperor, and confined during pleasure in Cayenne. I happen to know that more than a fortnight since M. MONTALEMBERT wrote to a friend in England that he had been warned by his legal advisers, in case of conviction and a nominal sentence, that it would not be safe for him to remain an hour in France, and that he looked forward, therefore, to England as his future home. As an example, therefore, to others, the sentence of Wednesday last is conclusive. The eyes of intellectual France cannot, indeed, be put out; that is beyond the power of any despot; but its lips are for the future hermetically closed, even for the purpose of historical or speculative discussion.

It is a curious illustration of the sinister influence LOUIS NAPOLEON exercises over the present Government of England that the articles should appear in the Morning Chronicle and other organs avowedly inspired from Downing-street, defending in terms more or less unblushing the iniquitous proceedings before the Court of Conventional Police, and recounting in terms of adulation rather than apology the political virtues of the hero of the coup d'état. Strong must be the secret motive which can impel the Derbyite Ministry to beard public opinion at a moment of exasperation like the present by the assumption of a tone of this description. What do they hope for? What do they fear?

Close observers of what is going on at Court, and in the circles which reflect its feelings most faithfully, account for the phenomena I have glanced at, and for a good deal more besides, in this way: At Windsor the present Administration have never been regarded as anything more than a painful and perilous but a temporary necessity—to be endured with a show of equanimity just as long and no longer than was unavoidable, but to be got rid of on the first decent opportunity. The darling aim of the Court is to break up both the old oligarchic parties, and to govern by a succession of coalition Ministers, as LOUIS PHILIPPE did in France, and as the new Regent (a bosom friend of Prince ALBERT) is now trying to do in Prussia. The elements that are looked to for the next combination of this kind are Lords GREY, CLARENDON and GRANVILLE, among the Whigs; the Duke of NEWCASTLE and Mr. SIDNEY HERBERT among the Tories; and a large infusion of that neutral class of shifty politicians like the Duke of ARGYLE, Lord ELGIN, and others of less note, who are proud of the appellation of being the Prince's friends. There is no question that these active intrigues are carrying on to oust the Ministry before it shall have been able to carry a Reform bill. Great indignation is affected at the timid policy of Lord MALMESBURY in the affair of the Charles et Georges; not that the courtier politicians would themselves have done otherwise had they been in power, or that any of them mean to originate a Parliamentary discussion on the subject. They will leave it to Mr ROEBUCK, who talks of bringing forward the question, but they understand too well how to play up to the dynastic prejudices and family feelings of royalty; and they have succeeded, I believe, too well in the present instance. It may seem inconsistent with this, but it is nevertheless true that a great desire exists in the highest quarters here to keep up the appearance of intimacy and amity with the French Court. Lord CLARENDON was at Windsor a very short time before he accepted the invitation to Compiègne, and nobody believes that he would have done so unadvisedly. Finding him bent on going, Lord PALMERSTON, as he has himself said when questioned on the subject, "was resolved not to let CLARENDON go alone." But the veteran Viscount now frankly admits that for him it was a great mistake, "and that it has placed him in a wrong position." Nothing he can do will make the Court desire to see him back again in office. His nomination to the Premiership was the result of a bitter struggle, and royalty, though it may forgive, yet never forgets a humiliation. Such being the state of the game of cross cliques and parties, the occupants of Downing-street would fain keep well with LOUIS NAPOLEON at any price. My impression is that they are as certain to be unsuccessful there as they have hitherto been at home. He regards their threatened extension of the popular suffrage here as a European question, and he will exert all his ingenuity and influence to expel from power in England men who, however insincere, are squeezable on that point. Unity of sentiment on this subject is a potent bond of sympathy between the two courts. America and her institutions is the object of their common hate and fear. Mr. EDWARD ELLICE, the oldest and ablest Cabinet-maker in England, and the confidential friend of nearly all the members of the Prince's party, has just returned from Canada, the condition of which he depicts in no very flattering colors. He goes about denouncing every thought and plan of Reform; declares that a great effort must be made to save England from being Americanized, and that all old party distinctions must be set at naught in the struggle that is impending. Depend upon it, the ground already trembles beneath Lord DERBY'S feet, and, should he make the slightest slip during the next few weeks, his career as a Minister will be brought to an untimely close.

CALIFORNIA.

Business, Actual and Prospective—Real Estate Rising—Caution to Shipping Merchants—Tehuantepec—Miscellaneous.

From Our Own Correspondent.

SAN FRANCISCO, Saturday, Nov. 20, 1858.

By this mail you will receive more cheering accounts of matters and things in California than at any time for the last two or three years. There is a decided improvement and a better feeling among all classes. We have been living on hope so long, that even a slight improvement is hailed with joy. The excitement attendant upon the Overland Stage route, and prospect of more rapid and frequent communication with the East, together with the accumulation of capital, has given an impetus to all branches of business. Real estate particularly is "looking up." The Fraser's River excitement having subsided, hundreds who had sacrificed their property are returning, better satisfied than ever with California, and are buying back the same property at an advance of fifty per cent., and seem determined to settle down and let well alone. The finishing stroke and quietus to the Limantour swindle has given confidence, and, as I before remarked, real estate is improving. A few months ago there were no buyers, and it was almost impossible to sell at any price. Now there are plenty of buyers, and few desirous of selling. Capital is abundant, and seeking investment. Lots that two months ago would not have sold at $500, will today bring $1,500 cash. The transactions during the week past exceed all the sales for the previous twelve months, and at good prices. The merchants are in a healthy condition and cheerful.

The best evidence of the influx of population is the demand for habitations. It is almost impossible to find a good dwelling-house to rent in the whole city, whereas a few months ago hundreds of houses had the ominous "To Let" on the front doors. A gentleman told me to-day that, four days since, he commenced building three brick buildings—two stores and a dwelling-house—and yesterday rented or leased all three at 2½ per cent. per month on the investment.

There is a general good feeling and cheerfulness that I have not seen at any time during the last three years. People that a few months ago stood around the corners with gloomy countenances, hesitating between Fraser's River and suicide, can now be seen with hats cocked on three hairs, and smiles reaching clear across their countenances. The barbers can shave three men in the time it formerly took to shave one. If the ball keeps rolling at this rate, we shall soon be as prosperous as ever, and up to the palmy days of '53—the only danger is that we shall run it into the ground. A great many buildings are going up, and more are contracted for.

It would be well for the good people at the East, however, to bear in mind that we can't eat and drink much more than formerly, and there is no necessity of shipping us all the provisions toddy and goods generally in New-York. The stock on hand is large, and within a few days half-a-dozen clippers have thrown fifteen or twenty thousand tons of merchandise into market; prices are ruling downward per consequence—and the merchants have too vivid a recollection of their burnt fingers to dabble again, and there's "no speculation in their eye." Goods are not sacrificed now as formerly, as the merchants are in a better condition to hold. It is to be hoped that Eastern shippers have learned something by experience, and will not again glut California with goods and merchandise sufficient for five years' consumption. New-York boasts of a great many very cute fellows, who always know a little more than anybody else, and are a little smarter than their neighbors; they are so smart that you can't tell them anything, and they won't learn anything—they can see into a granite rock,—the middle of next week—jump up, knock their heels together three times—hold themselves out at arm's length by the seat of their unwhisperables, and do all sorts of clever things. These are the people who go to work very slyly and ship goods to San Francisco, saying to themselves, "All these other fellows are frightened off—now's my time;" and at it they go. They slip into COLEMAN'S, in the most mysterious manner, and inquire what the rates will be for such a class of freight, and endeavor to ascertain if anything of that nature is going on board; but they are the most oblivious fellows at COLEMAN'S on that head; they don't know exactly—rather think not—and look wise, as much as to say: you are all right—got 'em this time and will make a big thing—it isn't to be supposed they are going to tell him several other just such smart fellows are shipping the same articles, and as there's always a few more of the same sort left around the water-front of New York—it turns out that about one-fourth the cargo is composed of the same articles, all shipped on the sly.

It amuses me to walk down on the wharf when a ship is discharging, to see how the cargoes turn out—sometimes half a ship-load of one sort and kind. As I am no merchant, and have no interest in trade, I presume I can give a little disinterested advice, and that is, to "hold your horses" and not rush things too strong, for you will certainly overdo it. Why can't you learn something by experience? As I said before, we can't eat a great deal more because we are prospering—because real estate is looking up is no sign we can bolt whole hams at once; if a man rents his house that has stood vacant for a year is no reason he can consume half a ton of condiments in the next twenty-four hours; and as for drinking, we don't want half the "tod" now that we did before; can keep our spirits up without recourse to A No. 1 Cognac, in original packages, as imported from France, vid Front-street, where a few days' storage has a most astonishing effect upon it—going in one-quarter cask and coming out several pipes. However, I won't waste my advice on such an ungrateful set, and I don't know why I should say, "Don't ship," when the effect is to give us more for our money and make eatables wearables and drinkables dirt cheap; on the whole, we would rather you would.

The success of the Tehuantepec route seems a fixed fact, and is causing a great excitement; passengers who came through speak in the highest terms of it. They say that with proper connections they can come through in fifteen days from New-Orleans easily in the condition transit is now,—as it was, they were detained two days and a half at Acapulco, waiting for the Golden Gate; one day and a half at Ventosa—total four days—even then landing here in eighteen days. There is a great rush for tickets by that route, and quite large number will leave the Golden Age at Acapulco this trip—from thence by the Oregon to Ventosa. A railroad across Tehuantepec, terminating some one hundred miles above Ventosa, where there is a good harbor, lengthening the transit some sixty miles, would make it the route of all others, and do wonders for California.

We have resuscitated the opera, and although not rivaling the Academy of Music, can boast of quite as great a furore in a small way. Twice a week we have dress or costume concerts, or rather an act or two from operas, a little seasoning in the way of arias and solos thrown in. I wanted to go last evening, but by 12 o'clock in the day there was not a seat in the house unsold. There are several artists of considerable merit, and although we have no Piccolomini to make a great fuss over and run after, thereby making great fools of ourselves, after the fashion of the days of the Kossuth excitement, we have a tenor that is declared by competent judges to be unsurpassed by any now in New-York. The chorus is very good, and when not too full of lager-bier, sing very creditably. I expect we shall soon have matinees à la Gotham. Don't matinée mean morning, or thereabouts? If so, how can the morning be crowded into an afternoon? As ULLMAN has set the example, we must not be outdone; we will have ours a little later—say next day. I'll get a seat the next time, and tell you all about it. I only got my head in the doorway last night, but it had a decided operatic smell. I detected the odor of new kids, jockey club, with a little dash of otto of rose and patchouly, proving that some few had got in who didn't belong there. Patchouly wouldn't do for the Academy—ULLMAN never would let it in, and he's right, for its abominable.

They are trying to get up another gold excitement à la Fraser River, on the Gila, in the Gadsden purchase. The Evening Bulletin, of Nov. 17 publishes a letter from a gentleman at Fort Yuma, who says an officer stood by and saw forty-four buckets of earth washed out, which gave $55. Another officer of the army, just from there, told me that he washed out a load of the dirt, dug and delved for half a day, and never once "got the color." There is doubtless gold to be found in limited quantities, but two men who were at work came down and hired themselves out to one of the steamboats at $30 a month, and there are plenty more anxious to get a chance to do likewise. It creates no excitement here—Fraser River has been a bitter lesson.

The 6th regiment United States infantry, that have been all Summer on the March from Salt Lake, passed through Sacramento two days ago, with colors flying, and making the best appearance they could, but they were about as ragged a set as could well be imagined. They have several thousand animals and a large train. In passing through Sacramento the band struck up the very appropriate air of "Jordan is a Hard Road to travel." They arrive at Benecia Barracks to-day.

California Navigation Company and Benicia Boy stock is down—the former on account of an opposition boat being put on the river and knocking down prices. We can go to Sacramento now for $1; freight $1 50 a ton. I have paid $30 for passage, and $40 a ton on freight on the same route many a time in the old days of '50 and '51. As for the Benicia Boy, he has lost favor in the estimation of the "fancy," and they consider it a personal thing that he did not get "knocked into the middle of next week." They expected him to sustain the reputation of California, and as he proclaimed himself the champion of Young America, to knock Mr. MORRISSEY into Lake Erie, wrap himself in the American flag and—run for Mayor of New-York. They think the least he could have done would have been to get himself decently killed, and have had some very elegant last words—as is now the latest style. Elect him to Congress, where he will have practice and get his hand in for the next encounter. PODGERS.

Politics in the Ward Schools—A Fourth Ward Teacher.

NEW-YORK, Saturday, Dec. 11, 1858.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

SIR: Confident of your opposition to anything that smacks of injustice, I send you this communication in the hope that by its publication, and exposition of the facts, they who contemplate the act which is the subject of my letter, may be turned from their purpose and a case of petty tyranny averted.

The School Officers of the Fourth Ward have in contemplation the removal of the Principal of one of their schools—Mr. SAMUEL J. ST. JOHN. He is a gentleman who has held his present position ever since the organization of the school, and has always commanded the respect of the residents of the Ward, who have intrusted their children to his instruction, with the most perfect reliance on his capability and judgment, for the last tenor twelve years. Evidence of his fitness for that position is given in the fact, that many of his old scholars are now beginning, as the fruit of his labors, to adorn the learned professions, and there are young clergymen now in this City who will testify to the fact that the ground-work of their knowledge, their first, best learning was communicated to them under the auspices and by the instruction of Mr. SAMUEL J. ST. JOHN.

There was a time in the Fourth Ward when such men as EDW. B. FELLOWS, Jos. PALMER & Co., were its School officers. They were men of intelligence and capability, and they never omitted an opportunity of expressing their admiration of the manner in which Mr. ST. JOHN conducted his school, and their satisfaction at the constant yearly improvement of the pupils. Of late years they have not been so fortunate in their choice, and we find men often elected to those positions who are incapable of judging of or appreciating true worth, or, if they were, would sacrifice it to the advancement of some favorite to the position of teacher, who is as incapable as they are unprincipled.

For the Board of School Officers just elected in that Ward I have more hope, and am confident that if the present Board succeeds in removing Mr. ST. JOHN, that they will amend the injustice by his immediate reappointment on their accession to the power.

I speak feelingly on this subject, for, as an old scholar of the gentleman, I can testify to his worth, his capability, and to that which is, I fear, seldom looked to—that he is a moral, Christian gentleman—and I do not believe there is one of his old or present pupils, or a single parent in the Ward, who would not protest with all his might against the injustice of his removal.

Politics in the appointment of school teachers, as in everything else connected with the City government, is beginning to be the most important consideration; and, when a man's political opinions get to be the entire test of his capability for such a position, then farewell to the good which is hoped from our otherwise almost perfect School system. The Debt of Illinois.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

The following paragraph appears in a recent number of the Chicago Democrat:

"Eastern papers will please notify the creditors of the State of Illinois that upon the 1st day of January next $900,000 will be divided upon such bonds as may be presented at the Comptroller's Office in our State. As, on such occasions, but few bonds are generally presented, there is no doubt but there will be more than specie enough to pay the full value of every bond presented. Should this money not all be taken, our people will take prompt measures to get rid of the two-mill tax, which has always been an unpopular one. If this were repealed our State might fail to meet its interest, and our bonds would fall again. It is to be hoped that every bondholder of Illinois will send on and get his pay."

This paragraph is so threatening in its tone and injurious in its character that, as a creditor of the State of Illinois, I am induced to notice it, as it is likely to deceive those not so well informed of its object or conversant with the State debt.

Under the Constitution of Illinois a two-mill tax is levied for the purpose of extinguishing the Internal Improvement debt, and the 15th article provides that the fund created shall be applied (on the 1st of January of each year) towards the payment of such evidences of the debt as may be presented to the Auditor for such purpose. In January, 1850, and yearly since, in consequence of the low price of the State securities, her creditors have been willing to receive the payment; but now that a premium is offered here, it is not likely that many will avail themselves of the privilege of permitting the State to redeem a six per cent. Stock maturing in 1870 and 1877, at par, when capitalists are willing to take it at a premium. The Chicago Editor threatens that if the creditors of the State do not gratify the authorities by meekly submitting to a loss, prompt measures will be taken to get rid of the two-mill tax, but he forgets that the people have already declined to alter the article of the Constitution under which it is levied, and thus signified their determination to pay the debt by the direct tax; but in case an alteration should be effected, it would not, as is intimated, cause a failure to meet accruing interest. The Editor, in his haste to do mischief, exposed his ignorance of the important fact, that a tax is imposed for interest purposes, and that it produces more than is requisite for the object, and if he will apply in the proper quarter, he will learn that the officers find much difficulty in purchasing enough State Stock to employ the surplus revenue.

The creditors of Illinois have no fear that the people will attempt to avoid their responsibilities, and if it were not for the periodical efforts of politicians and speculators to shake confidence in the intentions of the officials, the comparatively small debt of the State would command a much larger premium than is now so freely offered, and European holders would have some assurance that in a very short time provision would be made for the claims they hold for losses sustained in consequence of the non-payment of interest for many years. If the Press of Illinois desire to assist in placing the State credit above suspicion, the tone of the paragraph from the Democrat must be repudiated, and a different style resorted to.

ILLINOISAN.

Our Navy—Fleets of England and France.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

SIR: In that intelligent newspaper, the New-York Herald of Saturday, there is an article on the subject of our relations with Mexico and Central America, our naval strength in the Gulf, and the strength of the British, French and Spanish squadrons. I might almost call it an inflammatory article, and one well calculated to make "England, France, and Spain quake with fear;" for, after enumerating half the old tubs laid up in ordinary at our Navy-yards, and drawing largely on the mercantile marine of the country, he makes out a thousand guns that could be got ready in six months; but, Sir, why didn't he frighten the Britishers outright by telling them how many guns our river-boats could carry, (in their holds,) and how many ships can yet be built out of the fine timber growing in our forests, and the iron ore in the bowels of our magnificent country. It was, perhaps, just as well too to leave out the fleets, (real fleets, not what we are in the habit of calling so) that England and France could, and would, in case of necessity, fit out and dispatch to the "seat of operations,"—and this would be done, too, by the Governments of England and France, as a matter of course, and with a sang froid that would enable the people of their respective countries to go about their daily avocations, scarcely knowing that a war was going on, whilst we would be in a flutter from Maine to Texas, and with good reason, for we would be in a bad condition for backing up the American Eagle.

Now, Sir, I don't know how to write for the Press, but I hope I have given my ideas plainly, as I have given them honestly. I am a "blue jacket," and when the time comes I expect to help do the fighting; but I am for using a little barn-yard sense before the fight begins, by getting ready for it, and in doing so I would most respectfully recommend to Congress the building of fifty screw gun-boats, such as England built two hundred of during the Russian war, and with which she achieved her recent victories in China. In addition to this I would increase the number of men in the Navy to fifteen or twenty thousand. Let us do this or abate just a little of our pretensions. Let the country put guns and men afloat, and it will look like we are in earnest, and do much to inspire Europe with respect for us as a nation.

I am, Sir, your very obd't servant,
BLUE JACKET.

The French Press on the Monroe Doctrine

The non-interference doctrine of the United States, as set forth by Mr. MONROE, seems of late to have become more than usually obnoxious to various organs of the Paris Press. The Patrie, in reference to the canal which it is intended to cut at Nicaragua across the isthmus connecting the two American continents, calls attention to the manner in which the above doctrine, if permitted to prevail, would interfere with that useful work. The writer accuses the Cabinet of Washington of a strong desire to seize on the Nicaragua territory without any just cause, in order to establish a monopoly on the proposed line of international communication. After directing attention to the language of General CASS and other American citizens of note as bearing on the subject, the article says:

"It is known that MONROE maintained that no European nation could be admitted by the Americans to possess any portion whatever of the new Continent. But has this strange doctrine, without value in international right, and generally more easy to be appealed to than acted on, ever been able to signify that the independent States existing on that continent were but a prey destined for the insatiable appetite of the United States? It must, besides, be admitted that it is not for the purpose of remaining faithful to the views of MONROE that the Americans wish to get a footing in the Central States; it is perhaps above all because, at a time more or less distant, an inter-oceanic route must be opened to the commerce of the world across these countries. But it would accord with the ambition of the United States that this new route should be over their own soil; that it should become their exclusive property; that, in a word, they might assure to themselves the monopoly of the transit between the Atlantic and the Pacific. Such is the end pursued by the United States when, in the name of MONROE'S doctrine, they caress the idea of seizing the Isthmus, consummating by themselves the work commenced by WALKER'S filibusters. That object cannot be attained. We have already sufficiently shown that it was irreconcilable with the right of nations, with treaties, and with the interests of Europe. The two States of Nicaragua and Costa Rica have concluded with a French company a convention, the execution of which will assure the neutrality of the canal which is to unite the Atlantic and the Pacific. This neutrality guarantees all interests—those of America as well as those of Europe—and it is impossible that it can be sacrificed to any pretension. In effect, if this inter-oceanic passage were placed under the dependence of the United States, the commerce of the world would become tributary to that nation. Where interests of so universal a character are at stake, such a supremacy cannot in any way be admitted. The routes of transit through the Isthmus, whether of Suez or Nicaragua, ought to be opened on territories belonging to nations which, being constituted sole guardians of the route, could never of their own will interdict free access. Evidently, as we have already said, there is on the part of the United States a desire to assure itself of an entire monopoly of the Nicaragua Canal—an act perfectly impossible in itself."

The proclamation of the President of the United States against the projects of WALKER, the filibuster is strongly approved of by the Constitutionnel; but, that journal expresses at the same time its astonishment that such an adventurer could have been permitted to continue his culpable schemes so long, without being severely punished by the Government of the Union. While attributing to Mr. BUCHANAN the most straightforward intentions and a real desire to prevent any further attack on Nicaragua, our cotemporary remarks that in Europe the feeling is general that Mr. BUCHANAN would have acted still more satisfactorily had he manifested his sentiments by acts rather than by words. The following is an extract from the article:

"Nevertheless, we may ask how the Executive Government, when it had WALKER in its power, did not hasten to act in conformity with the spirit of the proclamation? How is it that the chief filibuster, against whom the President himself could publicly draw up such an indictment, has not been prosecuted? Is it that, even after the publicity given to this official document, the guardians of the law can believe in the fiction of an ordinary legal commercial opperation? If the conscience of the first magistrate was sufficiently enlightened to make him think it his duty to signalise openly a piratical enterprise, how is it the same enlightenment has not reached the ordinary judges of the Union, and caused them not to hesitate to issue a warrant against the known author of a culpable project? That is what seems inexplicable to people in Europe—what puzzles the Old World. We, however, remember that on his return from his last campaign to Nicaragua, after he had been captured and brought back by Commodore PAULDING, WALKER was arrested for a moment, then set at liberty on bail, and that since then he has gone where he pleased, openly preparing his new enterprise, recruiting men, and even visiting the Secretary of State. As to a prosecution he had scarcely undergone one, at least a bona fide one; in any case the tribunal which tried him, declared him perfectly innocent. If, after the perpetration of any act, justice be administered thus in the United States, why should we feel surprised that no attention is paid to simple projects? * * * On the whole, however, if for reasons which we cannot discern, the preventive action of the Federal Government be not complete, it appears that this time they will be sincere and rigorous. Mr. BUCHANAN does not abandon on the part of the United States the policy of extension which now prevails, but he desires to carry it out by avowable means, and by the progressive and natural increase of the preponderance of the Union."

A Contemptible Fraud.

From the Detroit Advertiser.

The President has been as mean and dishonorable in the favoritism he has shown in distributing his messages to the Press as he is false and unprincipled in his official acts. But as the message is conceived in iniquity, it is but natural that the President should carry out the instincts of his nature in the distribution of it. We are therefore not surprised to hear that he falsified his promise to have copies of the message furnished to all the papers of those cities to which it was forwarded, in advance of its delivery, at the same time. The New-York Evening Post states that by some collusion between the President and the New-York Herald, the package of messages for the Press of that City was transmitted through a reporter of that paper, with a special copy for it, to be used several hours in advance of the other papers. While their agents were impatiently waiting for orders from Washington for the delivery of copies to them, the Herald made its appearance with the message entire. No man, possessing a particle of honor, would have been guilty of so paltry a trick. Even a very ordinary sense of decency would have restrained a man occupying so high a position, however great a rogue he might be, from such an exhibition of meanness and dishonesty. But no act seems to be too small, and mean, and dishonorable for JAMES BUCHANAN. He is utterly destitute of truth, or dignity, or propriety, and does not hesitate to stoop to any baseness or fraud that may gratify his malice or advance his personal schemes.

The Herald's Newsboy.

From the Philadelphia North American.

WASHINGTON, Thursday, Dec. 9.

As pains have been taken through the agency of the Associated Press here, to relieve the Administration from all responsibility in regard to the partiality extended to the New-York Herald in the publication of the message, that statement may be answered with a few words, which cannot be gainsaid. The President sent the message to New-York last year by one Mr. SHAW, then an attaché of the Herald, and this year by one Mr. PHILLIPS, another attaché. The package was to be delivered to the Collector of the Port in both instances, but there is the best reason for believing that private copies were inclosed for that print, which gave it an exclusive advantage over the whole Press of New-York. The fact requires no comment, except that this is the first time in the history of the Government that a Chief Magistrate has been found capable of descending from his high position to propitiate the favor of any journal, and especially of the most profligate one in the United States. This is the sort of consideration by which the maudlin praise of that abandoned sheet is compensated.

Mr. Everett's Address on the Late Thomas Dowse.

From the Boston Transcript.

Mr. EVERETT commenced his address by observing that the statement of the Chairman of the Trustees of "the Dowse Institute" made it unnecessary for him to enlarge upon that topic. Its inauguration had furnished an appropriate occasion to commemmorate the munificent founder, and it was for that object they were assembled. They had come together to gather up the recollections of a quiet, unambitious, but important and memorable life, and to characterize a representative man, unconsciously such on his own part, and, perhaps, while he lived inadequately recognized by his cotemporaries.

After a brief summary of his career, by way of prelude to the address, Mr. EVERETT sketched the biography of Mr. DOWSE, of which the incidents were few and simple. He was of humble origin, the son of ELEAZER and MEHITABLE DOWSE, one of eight children, and born at Charlestown, on the 28th of December, 1772. His father was a leather-dresser, and fled from the flames of his dwelling on the 17th of June, 1775, an event which perhaps left a vague but abiding impression on the mind of THOMAS. The family retired to Sherborn, where it had been originally established. There ELEAZER DOWSE resumed the business of a leather-dresser, and THOMAS was employed in the shop and on the farm till he came of age. At the age of six, a fall from an apple-tree, followed by rheumatic fever, induced a lameness for life; and it is not unlikely, that in this case, as in that of Sir WALTER SCOTT, the love for books was at first awakened by resorting to them as a resource in the confinement of the sick chamber. At any rate, Mr. DOWSE began to read with avidity from his earliest years, and devoted every shilling that came into his possession to the purchase of books.

When he came of age, being desirous to see something of foreign countries, he accepted the offer of a friend of the family, the Captain of a vessel bound from Norfolk, in Virginia, for London, to take passage with him. He was to make his way in a coasting vessel to Norfolk; but the coaster was detained by an east wind, in Boston, till the ship had sailed for London, and Mr. DOWSE lost that chance of seeing foreign countries. Another chance never occurred. He immediately entered the employ of Mr. WAIT, of Roxbury, a wool-puller and leather-dresser, as a journeyman, at twelve dollars a month, which was afterwards raised to twenty-five. He remained in this employ ten years.

In 1803 he set up for himself, at Cambridgeport, with the assistance of Mr. WAIT, who furnished the capital, and received half the profits. This partnership was dissolved at the end of the year. Cambridgeport, a neglected and uninviting portion of the neighborhood before the building of West Boston bridge, was now taking a start, and Mr. DOWSE carried on his business to great advantage. In 1814 he was able to build the ample premises which he occupied, at the corner of Main and Prospect streets, to the end of his life.

About 1821 he drew in a lottery at London a valuable collection of water-colors, copies from the ancient masters, and two sets—one colored and one not colored—of the engravings made from these. These paintings, and the effect of their acquisition on Mr. DOWSE'S tastes and occupations, were dwelt upon at some length by Mr. EVERETT. About this time he is said to have contemplated marriage; but abandoned, if he ever entertained, the design. He adhered for the rest of his life to his business and his books, attaining a serene old age, and affording a beautiful example of the triumph of a calm and resolute purpose over unfavorable external circumstances.

In this respect, Mr. EVERETT considered that Mr. DOWSE was well entitled to be regarded as a representative man, whose example snowed the practicability of uniting a life of manual labor with the cultivation of a taste for literature and art. This topic was illustrated at some length. The spirit and success with which the work of self-education was carried on by Mr. DOWSE was shown in the formation of his library, which was fully described by the speaker. It contained over five thousand volumes, all well bound, some elegantly. It was an English library, confined, with very few exceptions, to works in our own language, but containing translations of the principal authors of Greece and Rome, as well as of the cultivated nations of Modern Europe. It might be said to contain nearly every standard English and American author.

In this library he passed nearly all the time not devoted to his business; and more and more as he advanced in years. He was a person of kindly nature, but not of social habits. He led rather a solitary life; was silent in general company, and was therefore supposed by many persons to be deficient in conversational powers, which, however, was known by his most intimate friends not to be the case. He never, however, came before the public as a speaker or writer, and never was a candidate, successful or unsuccessful, for office.

Mr. DOWSE, in his religious opinions, was supposed by the speaker to lean to the ancient formularies of belief, as they were interpreted by what are called the liberal clergy of the last quarter of the eighteenth century and the first quarter of the nineteenth, without following opinion to the extremes to which it has since been carried. His library contained the works of several skeptical writers; but it contained those also of the leading divines of the English Church, as also of the dissenters, orthodox and liberal. He admired the Liturgy of the Church of England; and the Liturgy compiled by a distinguished layman of Boston, was constantly on his table during the last months of his life.

No person, probably, possessing to the same extent the means of acting upon the public mind, had done it less during his lifetime. He said little, wrote less, and printed nothing. Toward the close of his life he made the first public demonstration of feeling and sentiment by erecting, entirely at his own expense, a monument to FRANKLIN—the first, with the exception of the urn in Franklin-place, (an ornamental rather than a commemorative work,) ever raised to his memory.

One more act remained to be performed: the disposal of his library, which, by a wise act of liberality, he gave, during his lifetime, to the Massachusetts Historical Society. In the testamentary disposition of the rest of his property, more than $25,000 were equally distributed among his kindred, of whom none were nearer to him than nephew or niece. The residuum, exceeding $40,000, was left to his executors, to be by them appropriated to literary, scientific or charitable uses. They had, in the opinion of Mr. EVERETT, performed the important duty with signal discretion and wisdom.

The collection of paintings had been added to the gallery of the Boston Athenæum. A conservatory had been built at the Botanic Garden at Cambridge. An illuminated clock had been procured for a church in the street in which he lived, and a handsome subscription made to the fund for the purchase of a chime of bells for the church in Old Cambridge. The Asylum for Aged Females, and the Massachusetts General Hospital, (two of the most meritorious charities in Boston,) had received important additions to their funds. A liberal expenditure had been incurred in fitting up the "Dowse Library" in the rooms of the Historical Society, and a munificent fund established for its permanent supervision and care. "The Dowse High School," soon to be dedicated, had been erected in the town of Sherborn, where Mr. DOWSE passed his youth and learned his trade; and the "Dowse Institute," at Cambrideport, would perpetuate his memory among his immediate neighbors and fellow-citizens.

Such is an accurate sketch of the principal topics of Mr. EVERETT'S address, treated with greater or less fulness, according to their relative importance, and interspersed with appropriate reflections. It occupied in the delivery about one hour and a half.

Mr. EVERETT will repeat the address at the Music Hall in this city to-morrow evening, by invitation of the Massachusetts Historical Society. The above abstract will serve to stimulate the curiosity of our readers to know more of a man whose life presents many features of interest.

A Diplomatic Libel Suit.

From the St. Louis Republican.

WASHINGTON, Monday, Dec. 6.

The novel suit instituted by Señor YRISSARI against the editor of the TIMES is being freely commented on by the diplomatic corps here. They feel outraged by the action of Mr. Y., who invades the special privileges of foreign ministers, by bringing himself within the jurisdiction of the courts. It has been held heretofore that no minister has the right to appear even as a witness in court without the consent of his colleagues, and in the case of the Dutch Minister, who witnessed the killing of KEATING by HERBERT in Willard's Hotel, the privilege to testify was refused him. Mr. Y. not only goes into court, but necessarily brings himself within the power of the Court to fine or punish him if needs be. The Government here express much surprise that a Minister Plenipotentiary, having a proper appreciation of his position, should thus humble himself; but greater must be the humiliation when the libelous matter is justified before the country, as I have reason to believe it will be.

One Disclaimer—Who is the Next Customer?

A CARD.—My attention has been called to a paragraph in a letter to the NEW-YORK TIMES of the 9th inst., in vague and general terms, that the President had caused certain money, justly due to some individual, to be used for electioneering purposes; with this accusation my own name has been so generally connected in conversation that I feel constrained, publicly and emphatically, to deny all knowledge or belief of any fact which can warrant it, and to declare that President BUCHANAN never did authorize, advise, or request me, directly or indirectly, to use either my own money or that of any other person for any purpose like that mentioned in the paragraph referred to, or in any manner affecting any public election.

An elderly French gentleman, living on his income, which was considerable, M. BECOX, left Paris some time ago for a Winter residence at Nice, and was tempted to visit Corsica. He has just died at Ajaccio, on Nov. 16; and the Journal de Corse informs us that, as there was no clue to his religious opinions, though his valet protested he had now and then gone into churches at Paris, a copy of the New Testament, printed in London, found among his wardrobe, was quite enough to determine the local clergy on refusal of Church burial to the unlucky possessor of such a volume.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT—Dec. 11.

Before Judge Ingersoll.

The Waterbury Brass Company vs. The New-York and Brooklyn Brass Company.—This case was submitted to the Jury this afternoon, having occupied the Court during the entire week. The action is brought to recover damages for the infringement of a patent issued to Hiram W. Hayden, for improvements in machinery for making brass kettles, by stretching a flat disk of metal on a proper form or forms, by the compression of a proper tool operating on the disk while rotating with and against the form.

The machine consists of a piece of iron, of the shape and size of the inside of the kettle, and made to revolve from 300 to 600 times a minute, and to which, at the bottom, the flat disk of brass, or blank, is firmly attached by a clamp. At the side of the form is a movable slide rest, running parallel with the side of the kettle, and carrying a small fixed tool or roller, which is brought up against the revolving blank, and gradually carried up the side of the form, rolling the disk into the proper shape, and making it thinner from the centre to the edge. Different forms could be used in the machine, to give kettles of different shapes.

The defendants claimed under a subsequent patent issued to Mary Cannon, administratrix of John Cannon. The form on which the disk was pressed was similar in both machines, and the tool which operated upon it was similar, except that in the Hayden patent it was held against the form by a fixed pin, while it traveled in the slide rest up the side of the form, but in the Cannon patent it was held against the form by a workman holding firmly one arm of a lever.

This was claimed not to be an infringement upon the plaintiff's patent, but a new and useful improvement, in that it combined the hand lever with the slide rest, thus enabling the workman, as was claimed, to change or vary the pressure of the roller instantly, if required by any hardness in the blank or any unevenness in the form.

The defendants, moreover, alleged that the invention of Haydan was not new, but was substantially the same as a machine for making basins, operated several years previous by Mr. Bullard, of Medway, Mass. In that machine the blank was firmly clamped by its edge between two rings of metal, which were then forced down upon a form of iron until the blank had adapted itself nearly to the shape of the form, when another piece of mechanism was put in operation, by which the basin was revolved under a roller from centre to edge, to give it a perfect shape.

The amount of metal manufactured by the defendants was agreed upon between the parties at upwards of 43,000 pounds.

The case was summed up by Mr. Keller for defendants, and by Mr. Stoughton for the plaintiffs.

Judge Ingersoll charged the Jury that there were four questions to be considered:

First—What does the patent to Hayden purport to grant?

Second—Was the grant a valid grant of a right?

Third—Have the defendants infringed upon any such grant?

Fourth—If so, what damages have the plaintiffs sustained?

That as to the first question, which was one of law, to be decided by the Court, he should charge them that the patent did not grant the several parts or any part of the machinery by which the combination claimed is called into action and made to perform its office; that the grant was the application of a rotary metallic form or mould, or successive forms or moulds in combination with a proper tool or tools, roller or rollers, sustained, moved and directed in a proper path by competent means, for the purpose of operating upon a blank so as to reduce it gradually from the centre to the edge, at the same time forming it with straight sides by successive stages, into a complete kettle.

That as to the second question, whether the grant of this combination was a valid one, he should charge them that it was, if the means used to produce the result were new and useful. That on the evidence the result was very useful, as by means of this process, the kettles made by the old processes of hammering and stamping, had been entirely driven out of market; that the patent issued to Hayden was prima facie evidence that his combination was new, and must control the question unless countervailed by the defendant's evidence; that in the patent issued to Cannon, the means used by Hayden were admitted to be new and were expressly exempted from the claim; that it must be admitted on the evidence that the means used in the Hayden patent were new, unless the same combination of means to produce the same or a similar result were found in the Bullard machine; but in that machine the tool did not aid in making the shape, but in smoothing and finishing the basin after the shape was made without the aid of the tool; and it was for the Jury to say whether the two devices of the tool and the former, acting in combination, which never did nor could produce the result by the means stated in the patent, was a combination of the same means, which, under the Hayden patent, did produce the result; that if they were then the novelty of the Hayden invention was overrown.

That whether the defendants had infringed was also a question of fact for the Jury; but that they must understand that if the defendants used the means secured by the plaintiffs' patent, it was an infringement, although they may have also used another device, not patented to the plaintiffs; and that it is not necessary that the defendants' machine should be exactly like the plaintiffs', but it is an infringement if the defendants' device is substantially like that of the plaintiffs'.

That as to the question of damages, if the plaintiffs were entitled to recover, the Jury must take into consideration the difference between the cost of manufacturing the amount of metal used by the defendants, by the old process and by the new, and also the difference in the value of the articles manufactured.

The Jury, after an absence of about half an hour, brought in a verdict in favor of the plaintiffs for the sum of $2,182 32½, being just half a cent more than the plaintiffs had claimed.

For plaintiffs, Mr. Stoughton and Mr. Parsons; for defendants, Mr. Keller and Mr. Gifford.

A Grand Jury was summoned for this morning, and was impanneled,—after which, Judge Ingersoll proceeded to charge them, referring to the various offences which would come before them, dwelling particularly upon the offences connected with the Slave-trade. He also called their attention to the accommodations for the confinement of prisoners held by the Marshal, with reference to the escape of certain of them, saying that the Government had been remiss in making due provision for them, as in many other matters connected with the Court.

SUPERIOR COURT—Dec. 13.

Before Judge Slosson.

Samuel S. Slater vs. Fernando Wood.—This is an action growing out of the police riot of June 16, 1857. The plaintiff was and still is one of the Metropolitan Police. On the above mentioned day he was detailed as one of a squad of fifty men to aid Coroner Perry in arresting Fernando Wood, then Mayor, on a warrant issued by Recorder James M. Smith against Wood, for forcibly ejecting Daniel D. Conover from the office of the Street Commissioner. Mr. Conover had been appointed to that office by Governor King. Mr. Wood refused to recognize the appointment, choosing to hold that the Metropolitan Police Law, under which the appointment was made, was unconstitutional, and refusing to obey it, until it should be declared valid and binding by the Court of Appeals. Accordingly he caused Mr. Conover to be forcibly ejected, in defiance of the statute, and the Governor's appointment. For this act, as already stated, a warrant was issued to arrest him, and it was placed in Coroner's hands for execution, inasmuch as the Sheriff was an accomplice of the Mayor and a co defendant in the action. Coroner Perry, together with Captain Sebring of the Metropolitan Police force, headed the force of 50 men which marched up to the back steps of the City Hall. The edifice was, however, garrisoned by some 700 or 800 men of the old Police under the orders and directions of Mayor Wood, together with a large volunteer force of roughs and fighting men, and a severe conflict ensued in which the Metropolitans were beaten down, and many of them severely injured. Among those hurt, was the plaintiff, Slater, who was beaten to the ground with a club, four of his teeth knocked out, his head badly cut, his arms bruised, his knee injured, and so forth. He seeks damages from the defendant, Fernando Wood, whom he seeks to hold personally responsible, on the ground that the old Police acted under Wood's orders and direction in resisting the law and making the attack.

The trial commenced this morning. Nearly two hours were spent in impaneling a jury—a considerable number being challenged and rejected for cause, and several peremptorily. The Court-room was crowded. Mr. Wood was present, sitting by the side of his counsel. The cause is still on. For plaintiff, David Dudley Field; for defendant, Judge Dean and Charles O'Conor.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS—Dec. 13.

Before Judge Daly and a Jury.

William F. Mott vs. The Mayor, &c., of New-York.—This was an action for damages caused to the buildings of the plaintiff in Vandewater-street, by the illegal change of grade of Vandewater-street in the Winter of 1857. The plaintiff introduced evidence to show that the grade was changed without the consent of the owners of property on the line, as required by the Statute of 1852. He also proved damages to his property by such change of grade.

The Jury, under the charge of the Court, gave a verdict for the plaintiff for $1,039 87.

For plaintiff Monell. Willard & Howe.

For defendants R. Busteed and R. F. Andrews.

COURT OF GENERAL SESSIONS.

Before the Hon. Recorder Barnard.

Counsel for Mr. Lasalle, proprietor of the Courrier des Etats-Unis, stated to the Court, yesterday, that his client pleaded guilty to an indictment charging him with publishing an advertisement of the Havana lottery in the columns of that journal, and was proceeding to argue that as the lottery was conducted in a foreign country, no offence against the laws of the State had been committed, when the Recorder interrupted him, and said that he would hear his argument on the last Friday in the term, as business of a pressing nature was now before him. Counsel immediately acquiesced, and withdrew with Mr. Lasalle.

It was expected that the important case of Moses Ehrich, charged with receiving immense quantities of stolen goods, would have been proceeded with yesterday, but owing to the sickness of the principal witness it was postponed.

Wm. H. Horton pleaded guilty to a charge of receiving stolen goods, and was sentenced to 30 days in the City Prison.

James Colbert was tried on a charge of receiving stolen silks, valued at $80, the property of Wm. Petit. Found guilty. Sentence reserved.

Wm. Andrews and Wm. Bennett, two youths, were charged by a courtezan, named Delia Lockwood, with highway robbery. They attacked her, she said, at 10 o'clock at night, at the corner of Greenwich and Canal streets, and took from her a handkerchief containing upwards of $13. Upon cross-examination her statement seemed scarcely worthy of belief, and after the testimony for the defence had proved the good character of the accused, and the very bad character of the accuser, the Recorder cautioned the Jury to weigh well what credit was due to the plaintiff. If her testimony was credible, there could be no question of the prisoners' guilt, but could they believe her statements? For his part he did not think many of them worthy of much credit. The punishment for such a crime was so severe that nothing but evidence which was positive, clear and straightforward, should be allowed to have weight. If any doubt intervened, it was the duty of the Jury to give the prisoners the benefit of it. Without leaving their seats, the Jury acquitted the defendants, and the Court adjourned.

SURROGATE'S COURT.

Before Edward C. West.

The wills of the following deceased persons were offered for probate:

Eliza Ann Geer, citation returnable Jan. 24, 1859.
Mary A. Stetson, citation returnable Dec. 17, 1858.
Carl G. Gescheidt, citation returnable Jan. 25. 1859.
Helen De Fr—s, citation returnable Dec. 20, 1858.
Emily Jane Handy, citation returnable Dec. 24. 1858.
Mary C. Tingle, citation returnable Dec. 20, 1858.
Edward Harrison May, citation returnable Jan. 31, '59.
Dominick Wyscheck, citation returnable Jan. 31, '59.

The will of Timothy Alden was also offered for probate, citation returnable Jan. 31, 1859. The testator was the patentee of a machine for setting and distributing type. Letters patent were issued to him during the past year by the Governments of the United States, Great Britain and France. It is expected that the patent will prove to be valuable. The deceased also held patents for other inventions, and among them one for street-sweeping.

The wills of Bridget Bradly, Sarah A. Cline and Richard Baker, were severally admitted to probate.

The will of William Floyd, Jr., deceased, came on before the Surrogate this morning, and the contestant, who is the father of the deceased, filed an answer setting forth that the deceased was not a resident or inhabitant of this county, and denying the jurisdiction of the Surrogate to take proof of the will. The issue now to be tried is the fact of residence or non-residence, which is a preliminary question to be disposed of before entering upon the merits of the case. Adjourned until this morning at 10 o'clock.

A. W. Bradford, Esq., for executrix; Peter Y. Cutler, Esq., for contestant.

HIDES.—The trade of the week, Mr. H. D. Hull notices thus:—"The receipts this week have been large, and the market languid, as most of the trade have supplied the immediate necessities of their tanners, and are not disposed to anticipate their future wants, unless at a material reduction in price. The decline has been equal to ½c. on all descriptions except Buenos Ayres, which have fallen off 1c. ₱ lb. The greater decline on the latter description was owing chiefly to their having been run up by a speculative movement to fully ½c. above their relative value. The demand from the trade, though not large, is fair, and fully up to the average for the season. The excessive receipts, however, have a depressing influence on the market. The stock is liberal, and a better assortment than we have had for some time past. Green Salted Hides, both Foreign and Domestic, are in good request, at full rates. The receipts from the West come in very sparingly. Upper Leather Stock of all descriptions is active, and prices tending upward. The Wet Salted Paras, ex. "Deming," as will be noted below, brought 1c. ₱ lb. over the previous sale of the same kind of Hide. Our receipts from the South, a large portion of which go into Upper Leather, are still very light. Receipts have been 95,424 Hides from Foreign Ports. Total Foreign and coastwise, 105,571 Hides. Import since 1st inst. has been 101,327 Foreign, and 10,388 coastwise. Total, 111,715 Hides. Sales during the week have been 56,987 Hides. The Stock on hand of Ox and Cow Hides is 76,900. (same time last year 370,400—year before, 6,736.) 1,232 Singapore Buffalo, 200 bales Calcutta Buffalo and Cow, 9,200 Buenos Ayres, and 1,000 Orinoco Kips. The stocks include 25,000 dry Buenos Ayres; 700 dry Rio Grande; 28,700 dry Orinoco; 300 dry Cnagres, &c.; 200 dry Salt Chili; 2,700 Salt Bahia; 6,800 dry Porto Cabello; 300 dry Maracaibo; 5,800 dry Truxillo; 5,000 dry Southern, Texas, Western, &c.; 1,400 dry West Indies; 1,232 dry Singapore Buffaloes; 200 bales Calcutta Buffalo and Cow; 1,000 dry Orinoco Kips; 9,200 dry Buenos Ayres Kips.

LEATHER—The movements and the sales, during the week, Mr. Hull reviews thus: "The market continues active, with sales about equal to the receipts, and prices are well sustained and steady. Manufacturers buy with much confidence, and are now preparing for the Spring trade, expecting a revival of the activity which was manifest in the shoe business until the Fall of '57. The receipts of both Oak and Hemlock are fair, but as the stock is light, and chiefly inferior tannages, buyers find some difficulty in supplying themselves with suitable stock. Oak remains steady and firm, without any change in prices. Upper in rough is scarce and much sought after. We quote: Oak Slaughter and salted Good Light, 27c.@30c.; Oak Slaughter and Salted, good Middle, 27c.@30c.; Oak Slaughter and Salted, good Heavy, 27c.@30c.; Oak light, Southern, 24c.@26c.; Oak heavy, for Banding 27c.@30c.; Oak heavy, Spanish, all weights, 26c.@28c.; Oak heavy, Cropped, 34c.@36c.; Hemlock, Buenos Ayres, &c., good Light, 23½c.@24c.; Hemlock, Buenos Ayres, &c., good Middle, 25½c.@26c.; Hemlock, Buenos Ayres, &c., good Heavy, 24½c.@25c.; Hemlock, Orinoco, &c., good Light, 22½c.@23½c.; Hemlock, Orinoco, &c., good Middle, 24c.@25c.; Hemlock, Orinoco, &c., Heavy, 23c.@23¾c., Hemlock, Orinoco, &c., and B. At a special meeting of the Manchester Chess Club, called in compliance with a requisition numerously signed, it was resolved: "That this meeting, while recognizing Mr. Staunton's right to decline any chess challenge which he might find inconvenient and incompatible with his other engagements, deems it proper (inasmuch as Lord Lyttelton has only just felt himself at liberty to answer in his private capacity Mr. Morphy's appeal to him as President of the British Chess Association) to declare its full concurrence in the opinion expressed by Lord Lyttelton in his letter to Mr. Morphy of the 3d inst., that in all fairness and considerateness Mr. Staunton should have told Mr. Morphy, long before he did, that he declined the proposed match. That copies of this resolution be sent to Mr. Morphy, Mr. Staunton, and the editor of the Illustrated London News, &c."

The Peninsular Correspondence of the 16th of November has the following: "The fact of the sending of the Spanish fleet to cruise before Vera Cruz and Tampico has lost much of its importance since it is known that its orders are limited to the protection of the lives and property of Spanish subjects, and that no land forces are on board. The news that the Government of the United States have determined upon increasing their naval forces in these latitudes has given rise to much speculation."

NEWS OF THE DAY.

In the United State Senate, yesterday, the principal business transacted was that of appointing the standing commitees, which was done by voting for the entire list. Yeas, 31. Nays, 20. Absent, 11. By this vote the name of GREEN, of Missouri, is substituted for that of DOUGLAS as Chairman of the Territorial Committee. MASON remains Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, HUNTER on Finance, CLAY on Commerce, DAVIS on Military Affairs, MALLORY on the Navy, and so on. Mr. CLINGMAN, the new Senator from North Carolina, addressed the Senate in favor of the abrogation of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, after which the Senate's Pacific Railroad bill was called up by a vote of 30 to 18, which called up Mr. GWIN, of California.

The House of Representatives yesterday resumed the consideration of the Watrous impeachment case. Several speeches were made in reference to that subject. A resolution, which was adopted, was offered by Mr. CLAY, of Kentucky, requesting the President to communicate the information in his possession, respecting the recent boarding of American vessels in the Gulf of Mexico by British cruisers.

A telegram from Washington states that Lord NAPIER will not leave that city until the arrival of his successor, which will probably be two months hence; and that the present Minister is assigned to the Embassy at the Hague.

At 10 o'clock yesterday morning the Jury in the Cangemi case came into Court, and asked the Judge if they could, from the evidence, find the accused guilty of manslaughter, as there was no chance, otherwise, of their agreeing. Judge INGRAHAM replied that it was in their power to find such a verdict, as the evidence, viewed in a certain light, would justify it. The Jury then again retired, and did not return into Court until after 5 P.M., when they rendered a verdict of "Guilty of Manslaughter in the First Degree." The punishment for this crime may be imprisonment in the State Prison for life, and cannot be less than ten years. CANGEMI will be sentenced at the next General Term. His counsel were not in Court when the verdict was pronounced, and no remarks, objections or comments were made on either side. The Judge, in discharging the Jury, thanked them for the zeal and deliberation with which they had fulfilled their duty, and apologised for having felt compelled, contrary to the usual practice, to withdraw them altogether from their families and society during the progress of the trial. Counsel on the side of the defence would undoubtedly have consented to their separating, but the Court of Appeals, in relation to the last trial of this prisoner, had decided that consent of counsel was not binding when it pleased those counsel to object to their own stipulation. He was, therefore, compelled to hold the Jury to the strict letter of the law, irksome as it must have been to them. Whether Messrs. BLANKMAN and ASHMEAD will raise any further objections to the administration of justice, in this now notorious case, remains to be seen.

The Orangemen met last evening at the Chinese Assembly Rooms, and spent the time in listening to the favorite rallying songs of the order, and to a lecture from NATHAN NESBITT, Esq., upon the origin, rise, and progress of the Orange organization. The hall was filled, and the entertainment passed off peaceably, maugre certain threats of a visit from the readers of the Freeman's Journal.

Mr. A. OAKEY HALL lectured last evening at the Cooper Institute on the "Lights and Shadows from Courts and Jury-Rooms." The Rev. HENRY WARD BRECHER opened the course before the Rutgers' Female Institute, with his lecture on the "Beautiful," revised for the occasion.

The parties arrested on a charge of being concerned in lottery speculations, and the proprietors of weekly papers accused of publishing advertisements of lotteries, were brought before Judge RUSSELL yesterday, but the examination was postponed until Wednesday. The proprietors of the Courier, Atlas, Sunday Mercury, Sunday Times and New-Yorker were held to bail in $500 each to appear and answer. Two new arrests were made yesterday, one of the parties being Mr. BENJAMIN WOOD.

Both Boards of the Common Council met last evening. The Board of Aldermen transacted very little business of public interest. The report of the Committee on Repairs and Supplies, recommending the alteration of some of the specifications in the original plan for building Tompkins Market, was adopted. A large amount of routine business was transacted in the Board of Councilmen last evening. Quite a spicy debate arose with reference to the manner in which the Joint Committee on Accounts had discharged their duties. As the result of it the present Committee was discharged, so far as the Councilmen have power in the premises, and a new one was appointed. An ordnance was concurred in, fixing the license fee of large cars running in the City at $50, and that of the small cars at $25.

A general jail delivery occurred at Rochester Prison on Sunday night. Fifteen prisoners, among whom was MANLEY LOCKE, recently convicted at Rochester for the murder of BENJAMIN STARR, made their escape by cutting off five iron bars with a saw made of a watch-spring, and letting themselves down into the river. None of them have been recaptured.

A telegram from Savannah states positively that the yacht Wanderer did land a cargo of negroes near Brunswick, Geo. Three men, believed to be implicated in the traffic, are in prison at Savannah. A steam-tug was dispatched from Savannah to tow the yacht into that port, but the shipmaster in charge of the Wanderer refused to give her up. It is reported that the negroes were landed on Jekyl Island, and that 150 of them have already been distributed among the river plantations. The number shipped is supposed to have been 350.

The Overland Mail vid St. Louis is becoming popular. Passengers arrived at St. Louis report that upwards of one hundred applications were made for passage eastward at the last trip, and premiums of $100 were offered for seats. The news by this arrival is not important. Large yields at the Gila Mines are reported, and emigrants were flocking in from all quarters.

The Bennett divorce case at New-Haven was continued yesterday. The direct examination of Dr. BENNETT was concluded, and the cross-examination deferred. Dr. BENNETT'S coachman was called as a witness for the defence.

Governor MEDARY has arrived at St. Louis, en route for Kansas.

Colonel BUTTERFIELD has reached St. Louis on his way to Fort Smith, to put the Memphis portion of the Overland Mail route in effective operation, and to inspect the line, with the view of facilitating the transmission of mails and passengers.

Municipal elections were held, yesterday, in Boston, Lowell, Newburyport, Worcester and Lynn, Mass. F. W. LINCOLN, Jr., was reelected Mayor of Boston, by 2,000 plurality; he was the Citizens' candidate.

The Isabel, at Savannah, brings dates from Havanna to Dec. 10. There is no news. Market reports will be found under the telegraphic head.

The sales of Cotton, yesterday, reached only 2,000 bales, at steady prices. Flour, Wheat and Corn were inactive. Provisions continued depressed. Groceries were in demand, as were likewise Linseed Oil and Spirits Turpentine. Freights were dull.

Our Naval System—Necessity of Radical Reform.

The present aspect of political affairs in both hemispheres gives an immediate interest to all statistics bearing upon the question of the relative strength of nations, and especially upon the distribution of maritime force. Ten years have not yet elapsed since the first Peace Congress of the world was held in the Capital of then Republican France, and the eloquent voices of such men as CORDEN and VICTOR HUGO proclaimed the millenium at hand. The extension in every country of commercial enterprise, and the multiplication of the resources and opportunities of industry were then very commonly supposed to have effected a radical change in the policy of Governments. War was out of date; national differences were henceforward to be settled by grave courts of arbitration; the part of personal ambition in the drama of public history was played out, and forever. Pleasant dreams, which a single decade has sufficed to scatter to the winds! Paris, the capital of the pacific, cosmopolitan Republic, has once more become the seat of an Empire, founded by a charge of dragoons; one great war has already stricken down the whole fabric of the Continental policy of 1847; and from every fort in Europe new batteries frown above the busy traffic, and the growing enterprises of peace. So startling and tremendous have been the combinations which, one after another, have been sprung upon mankind since the fall of LOUIS PHILLIPPE, that the programme of coming changes in the political world must be wild indeed for which no warrant can be found in the events of the past, or the appearances of the present.

On this side of the water we have certainly neglected to bestow upon the possibilities of our own public relations with Europe all the attention which in times like these they deserve. Absorbed in our rapid development, we have hardly observed the cotemporaneous development which has been going on in the Old World. We have looked, for instance, upon the vast emigration from Europe into this country only as an addition to our own resources, without reflecting that the same cause has been at work during the same time, in relieving the pressure of the population upon the resources of the States from which this exodus has been going on, and that while we have gained largely by this influx of labor, Germany and Britain, the great hives from which these swarms have come, have been gaining almost as largely in the increased enterprise and better-rewarded industry of their remaining populations. In Great Britain, for instance, during the six years, 1851–57, there was established a rise of from 15 to 20 per cent. in the wages of all kinds of manual labor, on the rates current for the six years previous; the advance in the wages of rural labor particularly being greater in Ireland than in England; while the close and accurate investigations of Mr. TOOKE have ascertained that during the same period there has been no corresponding advance in general prices, notwithstanding the addition of more than one-third to the metallic circulation of the leading commercial countries by the new gold coinage consequent upon the discoveries in Australia and California.

Moreover, in the great manufacturing countries of Europe there has been, during the same period, a gradual diminution in the hours of work imposed upon the laboring classes—a diminution amounting, in the case of the Scottish and Silesian weavers, to nine hours per week; and there can be no doubt that the condition of the European masses has improved, both positively and relatively, in a very important degree since 1848. This great and general amelioration in the condition of European industry has been accompanied by, and is, of course, in a measure, attributable to simultaneous movements of capital all over the Continent. After the revolutions of 1848, with their consequent and paralysing effects upon public confidence; after the Russian war, with its political uncertainties and its financial burdens; and in the face of a very general concern and anxiety in regard to the position and purposes of the sovereign who rules the most formidable empire on the Continent, the actual state of the leading European nations is one of greater prosperity, power and enterprise than was their state in 1847. This result has been brought about by the general application of speculation and invention to the resources of the Continent—an application so general that Rome and Turkey have not escaped its beneficent influences. The Old World has, indeed, been stealing the thunder of the New, and "going ahead" at a very respectable pace. The state of the naval armaments of Europe curiously illustrates this very important fact, and would be worth studying in that point of view alone, had we no more particular and immediate interest in the subject.

In no branch of human affairs has steam effected a more radical revolution than in naval warfare. At sea as on shore, the victory in battle must always rest with the Power which can concentrate the strongest force upon a given point in the shortest time. No matter what means may be employed to this end, the end itself must be reached as the indispensable condition of triumph. Whether the personal superiority of the troops of one people over those of another, or the greater excellence of one particular kind of weapons, or superiority in special means of transport, are the impelling and determining force, does not signify. The Napoleon who can so outmarch his Austrian antagonists as always to meet them at an advantage; the Nelson who can always so out-manœuvre his adversary as to put better ships against him under better conditions, will always be master of the day. In the war of 1812 we were enabled to keep the sea, in the face of a greatly superior force, by the speed of our frigates and the weight of their batteries, which always brought them into action at an advantage. Never, excepting in the case of the President, did one of these formidable vessels fail to escape from the line-of-battle-ships and fleets of the enemy. All this the screw has changed. For practical purposes the squadrons of to-day may be classed under two heads: the screw line-of-battle-ship and the screw gun-boat—the frigate being but a reduction of the one, the corvette or sloop-of-war but an expansion of the other. To the line-of-battle-ship belongs the empire of the open sea; to the gun-boat, the control of the inlets, bays and rivers of the coast. No frigate that floats could now escape the pursuit of vessels like the English Duke of Wellington and Conqueror, the French Napoleon and Algesiras, or our own Niagara, which, though called a frigate, is like the Merrimac, simply a disguised line-of-battle-ship; while any sailing frigate or sloop-of-war would play but a sorry part in a coast blockade against vessels like the Jasper, Jaseur or Skipjack, with their light draught of water, their steam-power, their solidity, and their 68-pounders. In the port of San Juan de Nicaragua we have at the present moment a squadron which, twenty years ago, would have been esteemed as light and manageable as a battalion of Chasseurs d'Afrique, but which is now subjected daily to the mortification of seeing itself outsailed and left in arrears, both diplomatic and nautical, by the fleets of France and England. Our only steam-frigate in those waters, the Roanoke, of 40 guns, would find herself overhauled in case of a collision with England, by vessels like the Cæsar, of 90 guns; while the Saratoga, the Jamestown, and the Savannah, would contend at a terrible disadvantage with lighter and swifter ships like the Leopard and the Valorous with three batteries of 32s and 68s.

That we are indebted for our actual position in the rear of naval Europe solely to the blundering system of our marine service, it is hardly necessary for us to say. In the art of naval construction we have no superiors. The magnificent Niagara is the finest model afloat of the heavier class of fighting ships. The London Times and the French Annales de la Marine, which do not always agree, are agreed upon this head. We have lost, alas! the executive skill of the incomparable builder to whom we owe this ship, but the results of his study and the fruits of his genius remain to us. In those beautiful vessels of our yacht squadron the Silvie, the Wigeon and the Haze, we have before us the minature types of that ideal which GEORGE STEERS realized in the Niagara, and by which he combined in her the qualities of the finest sailing-ship afloat, of one of the best of steamers and of a capital man of-war. There may be doubts entertained of the practical value of her actual armament, but if the Dahlgren batteries which she bears should approve themselves equal or superior in "fighting value" to such batteries as those of the Duke of Wellington, or the Napoleon, we shall have nothing to learn in the matter of line-of-battle ships.

Not so, however, with the lighter vessels-of-war, which in a naval system such as ours must always be, and on the coasts of such an empire as ours, are of higher practical importance. It would be idle to expect of Congress for many years, the equipment of a fleet of first-class liners. We must do what we can with what we call our steam-frigates, and with the conversion of such useless 84's as the Ohio, the New-York and the Vermont into block-ships like the English Hastings and Hawke, which, with their high-pressure engines and their heavy armaments of sixty guns, can always play so important a part among the coast defences of Britain. But why have we not a single gun-boat on the model of those which, during the last four years, have been swarming out of the dock-yards of France and England? And why are we wasting money on side-wheel steamers, which, for all purposes of war, have virtually become as useless as the three-deckers of Trafalgar, or the galleys of Actium? The sums thrown away upon such vessels as the San Jacinto or the Fulton, would have given us a flotilla of screw-gun-boats in the Gulf, which would not only make us independent of the polite offers of assistance constantly made to our frigates and sloops-of-war by the English steamers, but deliver the President from all anxiety in regard to mysterious fillibusters and evasive expeditionary steamers in the bayous of the Mississippi.

We must enter ourselves last in the race of naval development, but we have only to enter ourselves in earnest, to find ourselves very soon quite as far advanced as we need care to be. We must enter ourselves in earnest, however,—and at once,—and with an aim in the right direction. We have no more time to lose; and we trust the present Congress will not adjourn without enabling the Government to begin work seriously upon a squadron appropriate to our immediate necessities and the prospective employment of our forces. To create a steam-fleet in the full proportions which must be given to the meaning of that phrase, is the work of years. But if England was enabled by appealing to her private establishments of industry, to set afloat in three months' time a force of nearly two hundred screw-gun-boats, we surely do not overestimate our own productive capacity in assuming that we may in six months from this date possess vessels enough of this class to secure at least the most important points of our shores, and to protect our coasting commerce in the waters immediately under our eyes. More than this, it would no doubt be idle now to ask for. Less than this will leave us virtually at the mercy of any great Power with which we may suddenly break, and which may choose to make war upon us in earnest.

Douglas and Duquesne.

Senator DOUGLAS, after a triumphant reception at New-Orleans, is on his way to Washington, viâ New-York per Black Warrior steamer. His speech at New-Orleans was "two hours in length," says the Picayune,—but neither that nor any other of the enterprising journals of the Crescent City give more than the most meagre outline of it. It seems, however, to have been merely a repetition of the Memphis speech, which has already been given at length in the TIMES.

Mr. DOUGLAS is evidently wanted at Washington. Mr. BUCHANAN has evidently girded up his loins for a final field-fight with the man who did as much to make him President as any other man in the Union, and whom, of course, he will never forgive—nor, we fear, will the country either. His deposition from the Territorial Committee is merely a signal and a symptom. Even the President is not fool enough to suppose that this act per se can damage Mr. DOUGLAS in the least:—but as an indication of inveterate hostility on the part of the Administration, it may admonish the faithful and encourage the waiting and the venal doubtful, in the Illinois Legislature, to compass his defeat at all hazards. Mr. BUCHANAN'S Duquesne letter, lamenting the newly-discovered fact that money is used in our elections, will give his friends to understand that he intends to use it. This is emphatically his way of doing business. He always says precisely what he does not mean,—and his declarations are universally interpreted—like other dreams—by contraries. That Duquesne letter will put half the Democratic members of the Illinois Legislature on the qui vive; and the blow at DOUGLAS in the Senate, coming in time to give it a practical meaning, will raise the price of votes for Senator at least fifty per cent.

The fact is, DOUGLAS is getting into a tight spot. The Republicans, on the one side, will spare no effort to accomplish his defeat and elect LINCOLN. Mr. BUCHANAN, on the other, will join them heartily in this endeavor,—and with the Duquesne letter in one hand and a good supply of Federal patronage in the other, he will need to be even unnaturally stupid not to accomplish it. We advise Mr. DOUGLAS to make all convenient haste to Washington.

The Nicaragua Transit Affair.

Nothing has transpired to thrown any light upon the mysterious conduct of the steamship Hermann, in refusing to stop at San Juan del Sur for the Washington's passengers. Capt. CAVENDY has thus far shown no disposition to fulfil the pledge given in his published card, to lay all the facts and reasons for his conduct before the public. He preserves an ominous and obstinate silence, which indicates either the interference of other parties in the case, or a conviction on his own part that the least said will be soonest mended.

The Transit Company, which sent out the Washington, feel deeply chagrined at the result of their enterprise, and anxious for the fullest exposure of the causes which led to it. They acted in the most perfect good faith in the whole affair, having chartered the Hermann, distinctly stipulated that she should stop at San Juan del Sur for the Washington's passengers, and received the most explicit and positive assurances from the Government of Nicaragua that no opposition would be offered to the passage of emigrants whom they might send out across the dominions of that State. They deny emphatically the injurious rumors so industriously circulated on the Isthmus that their passengers were fillibusters,—and assert that only five or six of them were to stop in Nicaragua at all, and that these were provided with regular passports from Señor YRISSARI. As they were to be the principal sufferers, both in money and in character, from such a result, it cannot be supposed that they had anything to do with the disreputable conduct of the Commander of the Hermann.

We understand that Captain CAVENDY has represented to parties in this City that his return home was caused by reports—brought to him at Panama—that a party here on whom he relied had suffered some of his (Capt. C.'s) pecuniary engagements to remain unfulfilled, in consequence of which his property and household furniture were in danger of being sacrificed. If any such reports were conveyed to him, it would be well to know by whom, and with what motive it was done, and whether they were true or not. But this, even if it should be held to justify his desertion of the vessel, would not explain his having given his first officer orders not to stop at San Juan del Sur, as he had agreed to do. There could have been no lack of provisions and stores on board the Hermann, for she took out very large supplies from here, and replenished them at Valparaiso—and any quantity of beef could have been obtained, if needed, at San Juan del Sur, at a far lower rate than here.

The whole affair is enveloped thus far in mystery. Of course there is no lack of conjectures as to the influences that were brought to bear upon Captain CAVENDY, and so long as the matter is left unexplained, these must be of the most injurious nature. The affair is one of public interest:—for aside from the disappointment and loss occasioned to the passengers themselves, it is desirable that it should be known decisively whether trickery, bribery and cheating of the most palpably disgraceful stamp, are considered fair and legitimate weapons in the contest of rival American steamship lines. If they are, the whole Isthmus enterprise, for our own credit, should be handed over to M. BELLY or some other foreigner as soon as possible.

THE MOUNT VERNON FUND.—Nothing can exceed the energy with which the Managers of the Mount Vernon Association are pushing forward their preparations for the magnificent three days fête soon to commence at the Academy of Music. Nothing which ingenuity, patriotism and self-sacrificing public spirit can accomplish, will be left undone to render this the most popular and attractive festival of the kind ever seen in this City. We understand that the skilful and experienced diplomatist Chevalier WIKOFF, to whom the general management of the whole affair has been intrusted, has succeeded in persuading Mrs. JAMES G. BENNETT to permit her name to be used as one of the brilliant array of Lady Patronesses who will lend eclât to the occasion by their presence, and that the principal floor management of the ball will be intrusted to her accomplished son. The long list we have already published of lady managers, proves conclusively that, with this addition, nothing will be lacking to give grace and tone to the scene.

The preparations for the dramatic festivities are equally brilliant and promising. A large number of the most distinguished and respected artists of the profession have already volunteered their services, and the list, it is hoped, will be very considerably increased. The same indefatigable manager is in treaty with Mrs. SINCLAIR, (formerly Mrs. FORREST,) who has recently returned from California and England, and who, Chevalier W. hopes, may be induced to give the benefit of her professional services to this patriotic demonstration.

We understand that this is but the first of a series of similar performances to be given in various sections of the country, for the benefit of the Mount Vernon Fund. The Herald, a few days since, expressed profound regrets that it should be necessary to resort to dancing and play-acting to erect a monument to the memory of WASHINGTON. We are glad to see indications that it has changed its opinion on this subject. It must be remembered that Bunker Hill Monument was completed by the proceeds of a donation from the charming FANNY ELLSLER, under the diplomatic direction of Chevalier WIKOFF. What can be more appropriate than that the monument to the Father of his Country should be finished under the same distinguished auspices?

END OF THE CANGEMI TRIAL.—The case of the Italian CANGEMI is one of the most remarkable criminal trials on record. He was yesterday found guilty of manslaughter in the first degree, it being his fourth trial for the murder of ANDERSON, the Policeman. On the first trial the jury were unable to agree on a verdict, ten being in favor of finding him guilty of murder, and two in favor of his acquittal. On the second trial he was found guilty of murder, and the sentence was set aside by the Court of Appeals, on the ground that the Judge in his charge to the jury had neglected to make any allusion to the plea of previous good character. On the third trial he was again found guilty of murder, and the verdict was again set aside and a new trial ordered by the Court of Appeals, on the ground that his conviction was illegal, the verdict having been rendered by a jury consisting of but eleven persons, though his counsel had consented to such an arrangement. He is now, on his fourth trial, convicted of manslaughter in the first degree, by a jury of twelve men, ten of whom, it is stated, were in favor of bringing him in guilty of murder. Thus, out of the forty-seven jurors to whom his case was submitted, forty-three, it appears, pronounced him guilty of murder. Probably no man ever before had his neck in such close proximity to a halter and escaped hanging. The lowest punishment for the crime of which he has now been found guilty is ten years' imprisonment in the State Prison, while the extreme penalty is imprisonment for life.

How the City is Fleeced.

The State law makes it the duty of the County Clerk to furnish stationery, blanks, lights, &c., to the several election polls of the City. RICHARD B. CONNOLLY, County Clerk, under this law bought of MCSPEDON & BAKER stationery, for which two bills were rendered, one for $1,494 58, and the other for $2,298 50, making $3,793 08 in all. Mr. CONNOLLY and Mr. BAKER both swore to the correctness of the bill, the latter swearing that "the prices charged were at the usual rates" for the articles. A Committee of the Board of Supervisors has been examining the bills. Among the articles furnished were 175 Bibles at one dollar each. The Committee find that MCSPEDON & BAKER purchased these identical Bibles from the Bible Society for thirty cents each. The same thing was true of the other articles on the bill,—and the Committee cut down the aggregate from $3,793 08 to $1,675 48. Meanwhile Comptroller FLAGG had drawn his warrant for the payment of the whole bill, and it had been signed by the Mayor and Clerk of the Common Council. It was presented at the Shoe and Leather Bank, where payment was refused because it was not also signed by the Clerk of the Board of Supervisors—as that body was investigating the transaction.

This little incident illustrates several peculiarities in the conduct of our City Government. MCSPEDON, to begin with, is an Alderman, and is especially prohibited by law from having any interest whatever, direct or indirect, in contracts with the City. Mr. BAKER, in the next place, makes a remarkably free-and-easy affidavit as to the "usual price" of the articles purchased. CONNOLLY, County Clerk, thirdly, shows a becoming liberality of disposition in dealing with the City money—paying three times what an article had actually cost. And the Comptroller, in the fourth place, by certifying such a bill, while it was under scrutiny of the Supervisors, and directing its payment, illustrates the importance of the late election.

If the Grand Jury exercises due diligence, it is quite likely they may find some additional topics of reflection in the details of this little bill.

THE NEW BRITISH MINISTER TO THE UNITED STATES.—Lord LYONS, who has been appointed the successor of Lord NAPIER as the representative of Her Britannic Majesty at Washington, is of American descent. His great-grandfather was a Philadelphian, who removed to Antigua, where the father of the first Lord LYONS was born.

Mount Vernon.

We wish to call attention to the little Christmas gift for children, published by APPLETON, and written by Miss SUSAN FENNIMORE COOPER, author of Rural Hours. It is called Mount Vernon: A Letter to the Children of America. The profits are devoted by Miss COOPER to the Fund for the purchase of Mount Vernon, towards which she has already given time and influence. Anything from the pen of this gifted lady will be eagerly sought for, and this little book will find its way into the hands of every child in America.

OBITUARY.

Death of Admiral Lyons.

The news by the Persia announces the death of Lord LYONS, at Arundel Castle, on the 24th of November. The Admiral was 68 years of age. He was born at Burton, near Christchurch, from which place he took his title: Baron LYONS, of Christchurch. He entered the Royal Navy as a volunteer of the first class in June, 1801, when not quite eleven years old, and was first sent on board the Royal Charlotte yacht, holding the birth of a midshipman. In the following year he was transferred to the Maidstone, and afterwards to the Active; saw service in the Mediterranean, accompanied Sir JOHN DUCKWORTH'S expedition to the Dardanelles, assisted in the demolition of the redoubt on Point Pesquies, and returned to England in 1807. The battle of Trafalgar had then been fought, and no active service remained for the young midshipman. He went to India, stayed there five years, and attained the rank of lieutenant, gaining distinction for bravery in the Indian service—especially for his attack on Fort Marrack. Returning home he was appointed to the command of the Rinaldo, which was one of the squadron that escorted LOUIS XVIII. to France and the Allied Sovereigns to England. In 1815 Lord LYONS attained Post rank; in 1828 was appointed to the command of the Blonde, 46; assisted in the blockade of Navarino, and superintended the naval expedition sent to coöperate with the French in the reduction of the Castle of Morea. These and subsequent services were rewarded by the bestowal of the order of Knighthood, and in 1835 he was appointed British Minister at the Court of Athens, where he remained 14 years. In 1849 he was appointed Minister to the Swiss Confederation, and occupied that post till 1851, when he was made Minister to Stockholm, remaining there till 1853. War being then imminent, he was appointed second in command of the Mediterranean fleet. Of his services in the Crimea the London Times says:

"If at first only second in command, Sir EDMUND LYONS was from the first the ruling spirit of the British fleet, and to him we owe, in an incalculable degree, the success which attended our arms on the shores of the Euxine. He it was who organized and conducted the expedition to the Crimea, prepared the means of landing, and superintended all so closely that, "in his eagerness, he left but six inches between the keel of his noble ship and the ground below it." Not only in this matter of the transport of the troops, but also in every subsequent stage of the expedition, Sir EDMUND LYONS gave the most valuable assistance to Lord RAGLAN and his successors. Balaklava was maintained as our base of operations, and the army was saved from what might have proved an inglorious defeat, if not a terrible disaster. This, as we have said, was perhaps the most important of all the services rendered by the Admiral, and he well deserved the peerage which it earned for him."

The successor to the title is the new British Minister to this country, RICHARD PEMELL BICKERTON LYONS, who now takes the title of Baron LYONS of Christchurch, and will occupy the place of Lord NAPIER at Washington.

The telegram from Paris announces the death of HENRY, Count BOULAY DE LA MEURTHE, as having occurred in that city on the 25th ultimo. The deceased was the son of a distinguished French advocate and politician, and was born at Nancy, in 1797. He first figured publicly as a participant in the revolution of 1830. He was elected a member of the Chamber of Deputies in 1837. Six years later he evinced his attachment to the Bonapartes, by voting to repeal the decree of banishment, renewing his advocacy, in 1848 of the same measure. To this fact, upon the election of Louis NAPOLEON as President, in that year, he probably owed his nomination and unanimous election to the Vice-Presidency. Since the coup d'état he has occupied a seat in the Senate.

The death of JOHN JOSHUA, Lord PROBY, heir to the earldom of Carysfort, in his 35th year, is announced.

Baron PLOTHO, Bishop of Breslau, expired in that city on the 14th Nov.

The Indian Empire.

The Liverpool correspondent of the London Times writes on the 26th November: "It was stated in the Times of the 19th inst. that the steamship Indian Empire, of the Galway line, sailed from New-York on the 23d ult., (after being foul of a brig,) reached Halifax on the 28th, and departed for her destination on the 31st. Hatifax papers confirm this statement, and mention that she had three passengers for that port and eighty for Galway. From the Halifax shipping report of the 4th inst., received at the Underwriters' Association here, we learn that the Indian Empire positively sailed on the 31st. She is therefore now out 26 days. Although the Pacific, of the same line, is reported to have left Newfoundland on the 14th, no advices later than the 12th have come to hand here from St. Johns; but, considering the telegraphic facilities on the American coast, there cannot be any reasonable doubt that had the Indian Empire been at either that port or Halifax, she would have been reported before this. The statement of the Atlantic Royal Mail Steam Navigation Company, published in the Times of to-day, is therefore only calculated to mislead, more especially as they leave us in ignorance as to what their latest dates from Halifax are. It is to be hoped that the America, due here on Sunday next with the Halifax mails of the 19th, will bring some satisfactory tidings of the missing vessel, otherwise it will be impossible to avoid entertaining the most serious apprehensions respecting her fate.

CITY INTELLIGENCE.

CASES OF STABBING—CONDITION OF POLICEMAN DAVIDSON.—Officer DAVIDSON, of the Eighth Precinct, who was stabbed by JOE COBURN on Sunday night, as reported in yesterday's TIMES, proves to have been much more seriously injured than was supposed. He was nearly all day yesterday delirious, and his physician says he cannot possibly recover. WM. DOWNS and PATRICK DUFFY, who were arrested on a charge of abetting in the murderous assault, were yesterday taken before Justice QUACKENBUSH, and committed to prison. Affidavits were made before the magistrate confirming the story of the assault. The prisoners DRAKE and DUFFY are noted as desperate characters. About four years ago they were jointly indicted on a charge of murdering a colored man in Church-street, but were never brought to trial. They both appear very unconcerned, and doubtless hope to escape punishment. COBURN had not been arrested up to last evening. It is believed that through the aid of his friends he has made his escape from the City. On Monday last, COBURN gave a sparring exhibition with CON FITZGERALD in Hoym's Theatre, in the Bowery. If he is in the City he will hardly be able to elude the Police, as several Eighth Ward officers and detectives are looking for him.....The three men who were stabbed in the Fourteenth Ward at a late hour on Sunday evening, are now in the City Hospital. The condition of each is pronounced critical, and there is but little probability of the recovery of BENEDICT. TEDDY TOOLEY, who inflicted the stabs, has not yet been arrested.....A young woman, giving her name as MARIA SMITH, was stabbed on Sunday evening in Elizabeth-street. She was found lying insensible by a Tenth Ward Policeman, and taken to the Station-house. The stab was inflicted with a dirk-knife, in the back, and will probably prove fatal. She says she entered a disreputable house with a young man who was unknown to her. After leaving the house they had a few words, when he drew a knife, stabbed her, and fled.

THE LOTTERY DEALERS AND NEWSPAPER PROPRIETORS.—The examination in the case of the alleged Lottery Dealers, which was to have taken place before Judge RUSSELL yesterday morning, was adjourned to Wednesday, 12 o'clock. Many of the accused were present with their counsel, Mr. A. OAKEY HALL. Mr. CHAS. H. MURRAY, another of the accused, was arrested by Officer BLACK yesterday, and the same officer served a warrant on Mr. BENJAMIN WOOD, who is to appear with the rest at Judge RUSSELL'S office at 12 o'clock Wednesday. Meantime the accused are all at large on their parole. Messrs. JAS. L. SMITH, of the Sunday Courier, HERRICK & SEAMAN, of the Atlas, DEAN & HOWARD, of the Sunday Times, and MATTHEWS of the New-Yorker, charged with advertising the lottery contrary to law, gave bail in $500 to appear and answer. Mr. CHARLES KNOX is the surety for all of them. Mr. HORTON, of the Day Book, denied that he had published anything that rendered him liable. He had only published the result of the drawing of a lottery, and he thought he had as much right to publish that as anything else that was news, provided he did not call attention to the place of business of the lottery dealers, or to the inducements held out by them. Judge RUSSELL promised to consult the authorities with regard to his case, and directed that he and the six other newspaper proprietors who were not present should appear before him at 12 o'clock to-day.

BOARD OF CITY CANVASSERS.—The Board of Canvassers was in session all day yesterday—Alderman BOOLE in the Chair. A debate followed a statement made by Alderman REED, to the effect that the returns from the Second and Twelfth Districts of the Twentieth Ward had been abstracted surreptitiously from his desk. He had locked the returns up in his drawer, Saturday, and now found that the returns mentioned had been taken away. He thought his drawer had been opened with a false key by some candidate or his friends who desired to borrow the returns. In the Fifth District of the Twentieth Ward, TOWNSEND appeared to have received an equal number of votes on the "Union" and "People's" ticket. He knew this was an error, for the Inspectors had told him so. He said he had been "done" out of 140 votes which were intended for him, but had been given to another candidate. He moved that the canvass of the Fifth District be postponed till next day, and then he would produce affidavits from the District Canvassers showing that there was an error in the returns. The motion was negatived—(Ayes, 4; Nays, 6.) Alderman REED moved that the Canvassers of the Second and Twelfth Districts of the Twentieth Ward (Eleventh Aldermanic District) be directed to make a duplicate copy of the returns which had been carried off. The Chairman declared the motion out of order. The canvass was then proceeded with.

APPOINTMENTS OF POLICEMEN.—At the last meeting of the Police Commissioners Mayor TIEMANN entered his protest against the appointment of Sergeant WATERBURY to a Captaincy, on the ground that the latter was a resident of Westchester County. The Mayor said that, inasmuch as the Supervisors of Westchester County had made no provision for the support of the Police Department, it was not right that persons from that county, who bore no portion of the burdens of a citizen, should receive a salary as a public officer here. He thought it was not right to keep men on the force who resided in Richmond County for the same reason; residents of Richmond County had been appointed policemen before he (the Mayor) became a Police Commissioner; he gave notice that hereafter he should oppose the appointment of residents of other counties. Sergeant WATERBURY was, nevertheless, promoted. Mr. STILLMAN voted for his promotion, inasmuch as he was already attached to the Department, but he would not vote for appointing non-residents to perform Police duty in this City hereafter.

SALE OF RARE AND INTERESTING AUTOGRAPHS.—A large and fine collection of Autograph Letters, Portraits, and Curiosities, collected by Mr. G. P. PUTNAM, was offered at public sale, yesterday, at the rooms of Messrs. BANGS & Co., in Park-row. Owing to the inclemency of the weather, the attendance was small, and but moderate prices were obtained. Many of the most important autographs were withdrawn from the catalogue, having been disposed of privately. A few autograph letters of THOMAS CARLYLE, with a portrait, brought only fifteen shillings. A three-page autograph letter and portrait of BULWER was sold for $1 50. ROBERT BROWNING'S autograph nots to was impossible for the Board to dissolve a Joint Committee, the resolution was so modified as to direct the President to appoint a new Committee. Under the previous question, it was then adopted. Councilmen GUNNY, MCCARTY and ROSS were subsequently appointed in place of the gentlemen now on the Committee. A resolution was concurred in, changing the names of the streets fronting Washington-square, in accordance with the petition of Isaac O. Barker and others, to Washington-square East, Washington-square North, Washington-square South, and Union-square west, respectively. Shepard Knapp, Silas M. Stillwell, W. B. Astor, George Law and others, petitioned the Board to direct an examination to be made into the manner the Great Reservoir in the Central Park is being constructed, that all due precautions may be taken against the destructive effects which would follow leakage or breakage. The petition was referred to the appropriate Committee. President HASWELL submitted a resolution directing that the streets around Washington Market should be cleaned. Adopted. Chief Engineer Howard reported the receipt of $477 98 for old materials sold from May 18 to Oct. 4, 1858—making the total amount of money received since his appointment, Feb. 17, 1857, $1,919 23. The Committee on the business of the Croton Aqueduct Department reported that the business of that Department had been satisfactorily conducted. The Councilmen concurred in awarding the contract for macadamizing Second-avenue, from Sixty-first-street to One Hundred and Twenty-third-street, to John Kinsley; $34,846 32 is the amount named; time, seven months. The report of the Committee on Railroads, in favor of concurring to fix the license fee of the large City railroad cars at $50, and that of the small cars at $25, was called up and adopted.

Police Reports.

THE ROBBERY OF BOWEN & MCNAMEE'S STORE.—The efforts of the Police to obtain a clue to the goods—$3,000 in value—stolen recently from Bowen & McNamee's store, or of the robbers, has thus far proved unsuccessful. The only party arrested has been Mrs. Fish, who is believed to be the woman who hired the apartments in the tenement house in the rear of the store, from which access was had to the upper part of the building. An examination upon the charge preferred against her of being privy to the burglary and robbery, was commenced yesterday before Justice WELSH. Mrs. Anna Varar, who occupied a portion of the basement of the tenement house, identified the accused as the woman who moved into the apartments two or three days prior to the burglary. Further testimony was offered of somewhat conflicting character, and the case was adjourned for further examination.

BROOKLYN INTELLIGENCE.

THE WATER-WORKS—REPORT OF A SPECIAL BOARD OF ENGINEERS.—It is well known that the Water Commissioners have had a strong opposition to contend against since the first commencement of the Water-Works. Every step taken and every change from the original plan has been represented by this opposition in anything but a favorable light. The Commissioners, to satisfy themselves as well as those most interested in the work as tax-payers, solicited four distinguished engineers, a short time ago, to examine the entire Water-Works and make a report. This report was made on Friday evening last, in the presence of the Water Commissioners and a number of the most prominent citizens and largest tax-payers. The Engineers report there have been three important changes in the original plan, viz.: The removal of the pump-well 700 feet nearer to the reservoir at Ridgewood at an extra cost of $20,000; a change in the reservoir making two divisions instead of three; and the third change is the lateral conducts communicating with the supply-ponds. The first change stated meets with the hearty approval of the Board, as iron pipe is liable to sudden rupture when subjected to the action of pumping. Hydraulic masonry is here substituted for iron pipes. The distance is 700 feet. They also approve of the change in the reservoir, as the water coming through fine sand will not need settling, and as it was only for the purpose of cleaning the Reservoir that three compartments were originally contemplated. Under all the circumstances, two, in their opinion, will answer every purpose. The substitution of a puddle-bottom for brick may cause the loss of some water by filtration, but not to any great extent; and if this should be the result upon trial the brick can still be put in without interfering with the supply of water. The lateral conduits they consider a great improvement, because, should an accident happen to one pond, repairs may be effected without interfering with the supply of water. They indorse the entire works, and believe that the 20,000,000 of gallons per diem will be obtained. The engineers passed through the entire conduit, from Baisley's Pond to the pump-well, in a boat. They had an excellent opportunity to examine the work, and found it well constructed throughout, large enough for 40,000,000 of gallons per diem to pass through, and substantial enough to stand for centuries. The only objection made is to the open canal east of Baisley's Pond. This they consider should be changed to a conduit of hydraulic masonry, at an expense of $500,000. The extra expense is, comparatively, an unimportant matter. The Commissioners will probably apply to the Legislature for power to raise the money to enable them to make this change. A resolution, presented by Mr. W. E. MORRIS, was adopted by the gentlemen present in favor of changing the open canal to a conduit. The following was presented by Mr. G. S. HOWLAND and unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That we entertain the highest confidence in the ability and fidelity of the Water Commissioners, and fully appreciate and approve their action in inviting the most eminent talent of the country to examine the works and to make such suggestions in relation thereto as to them might seem expedient.

The engineers who make this report are JOHN B. JERVIS, Constructor of the Croton Works; FREDERICK GRAFF, son of the founder of the Fairmount Water Works at Philadelphia; JOHN T. CLARK, formerly State Engineer. Mr. W. J. MCALPINE was also appointed as one of the Board, but was kept away by sickness.

THE FOURTEENTH WARD ALDERMANIC DIFFICULTIES.—A few weeks ago, a Circuit Court Jury awarded the office of Alderman of the Fourteenth Ward to Mr. JOHN H. COLOHAN as against Mr. SMITH, who has occupied the seat since May last. Mr. COLOHAN has not got his seat yet. The matter was referred to a committee and there it remains, and no legal way has been discovered as yet to compel the Common Council to acknowledge the claims of Mr. COLOHAN. Mr. SMITH, the other claimant to the seat, is not disposed to surrender without a struggle. Affidavits representing Mr. COLOHAN as not eligible to the office by reason of not having resided in the city for three years immediately preceding the election, have been presented to the Common Council and referred to the committee having the matter in charge. Mr. SMITH, yesterday, moved to set aside the verdict of the Jury, but the motion was denied.

THE CASE OF MR. WARING.—At the meeting of the Brooklyn Common Council, last evening, the Law Committee was directed to report what action has been taken in the matter of the defalcation of N. F. WARING, late Corporation Counselor of the city, on Washington-avenue paving, referred in March, 1858; and also on the bill of N. F. WARING, for $995, referred in June.

CONSTABLES.—The Police Magistrates have all heartily concurred with the recent decision of Judge CULVER, as to the illegality of giving warrants to constables to serve, and all commenced yesterday under the new order of things.

CITY COURT.—About a dozen delinquent Jurors were fined in this Court yesterday morning. The Judge said the law would be strictly enforced; that there was no excuse under the new law. The Calendar for to-day will be Nos. 6, 15, 24, 25, 29, 30, 31, 32, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45.

A CARD.—Every few weeks the public is apprised of the arrest of lottery-dealers, and names of parties are paraded as being the persons engaged in the traffic, and from whom (according to these statements) thousands of dollars are taken.

The particulars furnished and the charges heretofore used have emanated from a professional blackmailer, who aims his attack at such as will not pander to his nefarious demands.

In the cases announced in your issue of the 13th inst., it is evident that this fellow has coalesced with a certain politician who was indicted for larceny in 1846. They suppose that ulterior ends may may be accomplished by striking at what they suppose to be my interests, as one of the firm of SWAN & Co., of Augusta, Ga., and WOOD, EDDY & Co., of Wilmington, Del. These parties know (for they have fully investigated the facts) that SWAN & Co., and WOOD, EDDY & Co., have no agents in New-York State, and that they are in no way engaged in or interested in the sale of tickets in this State; that those who sell their tickets in the State of New-York, do so without any connexion with either of said firms. That they purchase the tickets they sell direct from the firms, at places where the sale is lawful, and that the said firms have no interest in the sales here, and are in no way engaged in transactions in violation of the law of the land. In due time the truth of these facts will be demonstrated, and the authors of these persecutions against me, presented with an exposure of their motives to the public. B. WOOD.

MOTOPATHY IN DISEASES OF WOMAN.—H. HALSTED, M. D., has been induced to give treatment in New-York two days each week during Winter. His success in the cure of Woman's diseases is well known. He discards the use of caustic, with its poisonous effects, and all supports. His system of Motopathy is based on philosophic principles. It give vitality and force to the functional powers of all the organs, and has been tested in the treatment of five thousand cases in riding and Hospital practice. The cure is speedy and reliable. Those brought on beds even are soon enabled to walk. Over four hundred cases of spinal diseases have been cured by this method. Calls received at St. Nicholas Hotel, from 10 to 3 and from 6 to 7 P. M., on Tuesday and Wednesday. He is other days at his Water-Cure, Round Hill, Northampton, Mass., which is open Winter and Summer for both sexes. References given and circulars gratis. GAYETTY'S MEDICATED PAPER FOR THE WATER-CLOSET.—This wonderful production is the theme of praise with all who have tested its merits. All that the proprietors ask is, that it shall be tried by everybody suffering with Piles. They are quite certain that parties who are now free from that loathsome and blighting disease, will never use any other paper, for it is a preventive, while all other kinds of paper are poisonous, and will, in time, make sad havoc with their health. GAYETTY'S Paper is medicated in the pulp by a process entirely unknown to other manufacturers. For proof, sample, and large or small quantities, apply at the dépôt, No. 41 Ann-street. All respectable druggists sell it. J. C. GAYETTY is water-mown in each sheet, and his signature accompanies each package.

MONDAY, Dec. 13—P. M.

The Official Averages of the Banks in the City of New-York for the week past, ending Saturday, Dec. 11, present, in the aggregate, the following changes from the previous weekly statement of Dec. 4:

Increase in Loans	$181,805
Decrease in Specie	212,205
Decrease in Circulation	88,351
Increase in Gross Deposits	16,309
Decrease in Undrawn Deposits	559,207

Including the Clearing-House operations of the week, which show the interexchanges between the Banks, and including also the Sub-Treasury statement of Saturday, the following is the general comparison with the previous exhibit and also with the movement this time last season:

COMPARATIVE RECAPITULATION.

	Dec 12, 1857.	Dec 11, 1858	Dec. 4, 1858.
Capital	$64,668,000	$67,734,755	$67,734,755
Loans	96,526,037	126,520,129	126,338,324
Specie	26,053,877	27,195,522	27,407,727
Circulation	6,348,497	7,750,166	7,838,517
Gross Deposits	75,365,134	109,354,643	109,388,334
Exchanged	12,457,134	20,372,681	19,797,165
Undrawn	62,908,000	88,981,962	89,541,169
In Sub-Treasury	6,257,840	6,344,033	6,345,591

The Bank Averages show a very steady movement. The Specie line, of late, seems almost self-adjusting. As the City is freely drawn upon from the South, and to a partial extent for Export, the Gold comes in from California and the neighboring cities. The average has not varied half a million for three or four weeks past. The Discount line goes up very slowly, although the disposition is free with some of the large Banks to add to their line on prime short bills or demand loans. The market for Money to-day is very quiet, particularly among the Stock Brokers, who are light borrowers. They are offered deposits, in some instances, on first-class collateral, as low as 3 ⅌ cent. The continued ease in the rates on prime mercantile bills is still remarked, both at Bank and with the Discount Brokers. Exchange for the Boston steamer is held for an advance of ¼@½ on last week's currency; London, 109¾@109⅞, and Paris, f.5.17½@f.5.13¾. Thus far the business is light, and the extreme rates scarcely established. The remittances in Gold, put up for the South at the close of last week, went out to-day in the steamship Cahawba. The amount reported is $750,000. The Sub-Treasury received to-day $269,961; paid out $233,394; balance this afternoon, $6,380,600. The New-Orleans Bank Statement of Saturday week shows $14,951,536—a further increase of $525,222.

The Persia brings the gratifying intelligence to the many friends of the old banking firm of DENNISTOUN, WOOD & Co. that the principal house on the other side have resumed payment in full, by anticipating all their extended liabilities of last year.

A repetition of the political experiment of last Monday against the Stock market was made to-day. The utmost concern was again manifested by the short sellers for the peace of the world and the integrity of the Monroe doctrine, and if their neighbors, who are long of stocks, refuse to take the alarm now, the calculation is that they will be made to do so, by an undefinable something that is hereafter to turn up! Meanwhile the Bear account, which worked so poorly last week on the President's Message, is renewed to-day on the Central American news, and prices fell, at the early Board, ¼@1 ⅌ cent., beginning with some of the State Stocks and running through the Railway share list, in pretty even proportions. New-York Central from 84@84¼ on Saturday, opened at 83½, and was sold down to 83¼@83⅛; Reading from 51⅝ to 50¾; Galena to 72½, and Rock Island to 61½ ⅌ cent. Illinois Central suffered in addition from the Persia's advices of the effect of the recent special report in London. We hear that, after sales in that market were forced at 71@72, the stock recovered to 74 ⅌ cent. Michigan Southern Guaranteed shares were fairly supported at the morning session at 48@48⅜ ⅌ cent. The Board of Directors have adjourned, to meet in January at Toledo, without final action on the disposition of the earnings applicable to the Guaranteed Stock. The common Bonds of the Erie Company were lower, while the mortgages advanced to 86 for the 1859's. Pacific Mail shares and Panama were both weaker than on Saturday by 1@1½ ⅌ cent. Some sales were made of Panama at 118½ ⅌ cent. The amount of business in State Stocks was not large. Missouris fell to 89½ ⅌ cent. and Tennessees to 93¾ ⅌ cent. The 8 ⅌ cents. of Minnesota sold at 108½ ⅌ cent. The January interest has been provided in this City, and the first year's Sinking Fund is also with the Treasurer, all for the original State issue of $250,000. In the afternoon the general market, at the close of the printed list of sales opened with more steadiness, and a good inquiry was shown for several of the leading Stocks, such as Missouris, New-York Central, Pacific Mail, &c. Some of the Western Shares were further depressed, and Panama was offered down to 117¾ ⅌ cent., but this price was subsequently bid; Central left off 83½@¾; Reading, 51@51½, and Missouri 6s 89 ⅌ cent.

STATEMENT OF THE UNION BAN

LITERATURE.

ANOTHER BROADSIDE.

"THE MOUNT VERNON PAPERS," by the Hon. EDWARD EVERETT, will be commenced in the first number of the New-York Ledger for the new year, which will be for sale at all the book-stores and periodical dépôts throughout the country next week.

A week or two ago, Mr. BONNER occupied one page of the Times with "opinions of the Press,"—he now monopolizes another in a similar manner. These notices are all fresh—have not heretofore been given, and are only a few of the many expressions of opinion which Mr. EVERETT's engagement to write for the Ledger has elicited.

From the New-York Tribune.

The country journals are still engaged in discussing the recent engagement of Mr. Everett to write for the New-York Ledger, and, very naturally, some take one view and some another, though the great majority incline to the opinion that the arrangement is a good thing for all parties. In this, we dare say, they are right.

It most indubitably is a good thing for Mr. Everett. No other act of his life has been calculated to add so much to his popularity. Widely as he is known, it will make his name a household word in many families where it is hardly known now.

It is certainly a good thing for Mr. Bonner also. In the first place, it will add largely to his already immense number of readers. But this is not the only advantage, nor the principal one, which he will derive from it. It has served to direct the public mind more to a more thorough and full examination of the general character and contents of his journal; and to the formation of a more favorable judgment thereon, in many quarters, than was previously entertained. The result of such an examination has been to change, considerably, our own estimation of the Ledger. We knew that its proprietor was a man of great enterprise and superior business talents, deeply skilled in the masterly art of advertising; but we were not aware, until our attention was recently more especially called to the subject, of the labor and care bestowed upon the different departments of his journal, and the varied interest which his numerous writers impart to its columns. Nor were we aware of, what is much more important, the pure moral tone, and scrupulous regard to the nicest sense of propriety, with which it is conducted. In this respect especially, it is worthy of commendation.

We presume, from the course of Mr. Bonner hitherto, that he will not rest with the engagement of Mr. Everett, but that other names of similar eminence in literature, will, in due time, be added to the list of his contributors.

From the Boston Daily Herald.

MR. EVERETT AS A NEWSPAPER WRITER.—The recent compact between Mr. Everett and Mr. Bonner, by which the former binds himself to contribute fifty-two articles in a year to the paper published by the latter, for the sum of $10,000—or two hundred dollars an article—which has already been paid in advance, has excited, as it was well calculated to do, a wide degree of attention and a great deal of newspaper remark. The operation was a shrewd and sagacious one on the part of Mr. Bonner, and he is making the most of it in a business point of view. But was it nothing more? We have been surprised to see comments in some of the papers unfavorable to Mr. Everett for accepting this princely sum upon the condition of writing for a weekly newspaper, setting forth the idea that he degrades the high position he has risen to as a man of letters, a statesman and orator.

It is an old saying, and a vulgar one, that "It is a foul bird that dirties its own nest." Those newspaper editors who have indulged in censures against Mr. Everett for agreeing to write for a weekly paper upon the terms which have been specified, are the foul birds of the Press. We say nothing now of the noble and patriotic object to which Mr. Everett has devoted the past year, awakening the noblest emotions of the soul by his appeals to his fellow-countrymen to rescue the grave of the Father of his Country from unhallowed hands, and to which he now devotes his pen. His proud position in this respect is sufficiently understood. What we wish to call attention to is the absurd and contemptible idea that Mr. Everett degrades his position by writing articles for the popular Press.

If orators and statesmen, if the wisest and profoundest men in the country are sincere when they say the free popular Press is the proud distinctive institution of a free people, their daily and weekly instructor, spreading its leaves to every house, stamping its influence upon every mind, how can a statesman—were he greater than an Everett,—how can a scholar even more polished than he, degrade himself by taking up the pen for this universal and diffusive instructor? Is the quality of goodness, of patriotism, of virtue, degraded by coming in contact with the public mind? We have not so been taught. Mr. Everett, with his great and expansive mind, can bring new power to the Press. It is a fitting close of an illustrious career, to sit in his closet and by means of the popular newspaper, scatter the riches of his mind throughout the land, and to every inhabitant thereof. He is the Gamaliel who is competent to teach; at whose feet millions will be delighted to sit and learn. And when an opportunity is offered to meet half a million at once, shall he be said to be degrading himself for improving that opportunity?

We rejoice that Mr. Everett has entered into our profession. He will grace it well. It will lend new honors to him, for it is among the noblest employments that can engage the attention of a citizen. We pity those newspaper writers who lament the degradation of Mr. Everett in coming into their employment. If all were like them, he might be degraded. Thank God, all are not like them.

From the Springfield, (Mass.,) Daily Republican.

MR. BONNER, THE NEW-YORK LEDGER AND MR. EVERETT.—The sensitiveness of Mr. Bonner, the famous publisher of the New-York Ledger, to the careless and sometimes severe comment of some of the Press upon his dashing way of doing business, and the literary character of some portion of the contents of his paper, prove him to have a soul above mere money-making, and that he has a creditable pride in the real literary excellence and moral tone of the widely-circulated journal to which he has given a world-wide fame. Indeed, it is a fact that the Ledger is per se a far better sheet than people who have not seen it are in the habit of believing; and the sum of its influence being instructive, elevating and in the best sense improving to the great body of its readers, there is abundant reason for rejoicing in its great circulation. It is read by many people who, but for it, would read no paper, or those which are at least of doubtful character, if not of positively bad influence. The effect of a journal circulating 300,000 to half a million copies per week, and read by several times that number, cannot but be very great upon the vast majority of the minds who come in contact with it; and we rejoice to believe, and to know, that Mr. Bonner conscientiously feels the responsibility of this power, in his case, and is using it in such a manner as not only to do no harm to the minds and morals of the millions that come within his influence, but positively to elevate and improve them.

And this suggests a reason why Mr. Everett should have accepted Mr. Bonner's offer to write for the Ledger, that we have not seen alluded to before. In no other way is it possible for him with so little effort to instruct and elevate the popular taste in literature, and inform the public mind on the subject which he may choose to select, to so great an extent, as he can and will do in this enterprise. Instead of an audience of two thousand, which is the highest average of those he has been accustomed to address, he here speaks weekly to one of at least a million, and of a character, too, more needing instruction and more susceptible to the influence of men of learning and genius, than that of those who gather to hear his occasional spoken words in our great cities. Indeed, this is the first time Mr. Everett has come actually in contact with the real masses of our people; and it presents to him an opportunity such as few men of his power ever have, and throws upon him a responsibility which we have no doubt he fully feels, and which we trust he will discharge alike to his own greatest honor, and the culture and inspiration with high thoughts and to manly deeds of the wide-spread millions who are now for the first time to come within the play of his genius and knowledge. The $10,000 which he secures to the Mount Vernon Fund by writing for the Ledger is the smallest part of the good which he may do in this contract.

From the Hartford Daily Post.

It is conceded on all hands that Bonner's enterprise in securing the services of the Hon. Edward Everett, as a contributor to the New-York Ledger, was a master stroke of policy. The newspaper Press, far and near, are loud in their commendations of the sagacity and foresight which so successfully planned and executed the stupendous bargain; and perhaps there is not another man in the United States, possessing the literary and political fame of Edward Everett, who would have met so boldly the scruples which must have arrayed themselves, side by side, with the proposal, and ventured upon an act so tempting to sarcasm and which might seem so hazardous to dignity. There is no doubt that he foresaw the petty attacks of those whose narrow minds of thoughtlessness would not permit a profound or candid view of the matter. But in yielding to Bonner's offer, Edward Everett's motive and conduct are above impeachment. His fame is not tarnished, nor is his dignity impaired by the act. The dignity of such a man is not so accessible. Nor should we miscalculate his motives. The consideration of so noble a contribution as ten thousand dollars to his patriotic project, is probably but a moiety of the advantage which he doubtless hopes to gain by the measure. The influence thus placed at his command will be enormous. Through no other channel under heaven could so powerful an intellect speak with so powerful a voice as through the columns of the Ledger. The class in which that paper has obtained so wide a circulation is the one of all others the most difficult of access by a mind like his, and probably no other medium exists, or could be devised, through which such a mind could have reached those composing it. And when we bear in mind that his contributions will introduce the paper into circles which it would never otherwise have entered, while they will in no wise diminish its circulation in its old channels, we cannot well over-estimate the tremendous power of the leverage he grasps. This was doubtless embraced in his considerations—and with such advantages before him, and such motives to govern him, he cannot justly be censured for acceding to Bonner's proposal. His participation in the business should be held as much above criticism, as it is beyond suspicion of evil; and those who attempt to ridicule his conduct, expose their ignorance and stupidity, as much as they debase themselves by an exhibition of their envy.

BONNER AND THE LEDGER—The other day, while in Gotham, we threaded our way along Nassau-stree until we came to Ann. There we saw the sign of the "Ledger," and determined to look at the lion in his den. We found Bonner—the Napoleon of advertisers—the man who prints three hundred thousand copies of the Ledger. He was talking to the Rev. Dr. ——, who was anxious to get some of his lucubrations published at the same time Edward Everett's Vernon papers appeared in print. Had Mr. Bonner's paper the same merit it now possesses, with a narrow circulation, Dr. —— would have given that office a broad margin. Mr. Bonner is about thirty-five years of age, short and stout built, of the sanguine temperament; has brown hair and dark eyes, a full healthy face, and a well-developed head. He is a man of great firmness and energy, generous, sociable, and polite. He edits his own paper, is a practical printer, knows how to nail a good bargain, and is shrewd enough to avoid foolish ones. He cares little for the criticisms of the Press, for he insists upon it that his readers are competent judges for themselves, and his own consciousness assures him that his paper merits the support o the people.

From Harper's Weekly.

Now, when a man says to Mr. Everett that he will give him $10,000 for the Mount Vernon purchase, if Mr. Everett will write a series of articles for his paper, he merely proposes to him to continue his work—only, instead of preparing something for two or three thousand people to hear, he is to prepare something for two or three hundred thousand people to read. And who is to judge of the "dignity" of the medium? Would it not be "dignified" for Mr. Everett to make $5,000 by delivering his "Washington" in a circus building, or a market, or a warehouse, or a railroad dépôt? Cannot the theme, and the speaker, and his eloqueuce, "dignify" any place in which he chooses to stand?

The New-York Ledger, so far as we have noticed, is a paper of perfect decorum. It is a proof of its proprietor's sagacity that it is so. It is free from the usual faults of journals—malice and bitter partisanship. It is devoted strictly to the amenities of literature. Along its columns the gusts of politics never blow. Among those columns Mr. Everett can walk as calmly as Plato under those of the Academy. And if he will only talk as wisely, there will probably be very little more trouble about the "dignity" of his position.

From the Frederick (Md.) Herald.

THE NEW-YORK LEDGER AND EDWARD EVERETT.—That Mr. Bonner, proprietor of the New-York Ledger, is the Prince of publishers, we think is a fact that will be readily admitted by everybouy who looks into its pages. It certainly requires no ordinary qualifications, of both a business and mental kind, to enable him to get up a journal which can accommodate and gratify so large a range of tastes. The object of the proprietor is no doubt to make money; but, like a good tariff, in making money for himself, he gives incidental protection to good purposes, and helps to sustain and to foster an American Literature.

He displays in his operations a princely liberality which deserves that recognition and encouragement which he is receiving.

Some of the brightest and purest stars of American literature shine in Mr. Bonner's galaxy. There we find the brilliant and pungent wit of Prentice—the pure and refined sertiment, and genial humor, of Fanny Fern—and there we find Alice Carey, who looks upon man and nature with a most kindly and affectionate eye, and talks and sings so wisely and sweetly about them—and a number of others who have deservedly won high places in the ranks of American authors; so that even the scholar and best cultivated amateur can find something to please them in the Ledger.

From the Boston Evening Gazette.

If Bonner, of the New-York Ledger, will visit Boston, one of Parker's best suppers shall be offered him, and possibly we can induce Mr. Everett to form the trio. Bonner, we adore you. Your last coup is worthy of Napoleon. Go on and prosper, for you certainly deserve it. If we ever forget ourselves and utter an oath, it shall be "By Bonner."

WRITING FOR THE PRESS—A JUST REBUKE TO EDITORS.—A number of inconsiderate journals have made the recent engagement between Mr. Everett and the New-York Ledger, to contribute a series of articles in consideration of $10,000, to be placed at the disposal of the ladies who are negotiating for the purchase of the Mount Vernon estate, the subject of bitter criticism. Prominent among those who offended in this particular, is the Editor of the Cincinnati Enquirer, and we are right glad to see that "An Ex-Editor" has administered to him, and all others similarly offending, a very wholesome and timely rebuke. We make the following extract:

"I would like to know what there is surprising in Mr. Everett's becoming an editorial contributor to the Press. Is there anything in the calling and profession of an editor which is in the least degree dishonorable or derogatory to any man, however able or prominent he may be? There is nothing about Mr. Everett, either as respects his ability, previous antecedents or position, which will cause him to lose "dignity" by becoming an editor. On the contrary, the profession of an editor is more likely to confer honor upon him than to detract from it. Yes, were he ten times more distinguished as a historical character, his connection with the Press would not detract from his elevation. Without disparaging Mr. Everett, I can safely say that there are editors connected with our leading journals who are fully his equals in ability and in political and historical prestige. In England and France the most distinguished public men have been editors and contributors to the Press. We may mention in this connection, Thiers and Guizot, both Prime Ministers of France and both editors by profession. Dr. Johnson and Joseph Addison acquired the best part of their reputation in connection with the "Rambler" and "Tatler," of which they were respectively the editors. Away then with the shallow and contemptible codfish aristocratic sentiment that a statesman like Mr. Everett loses cast or lowers his esteem when he becomes one of that band of men who, through the Press, wield a greater influence than all the cabinets and statesmen on the globe.

It is astonishing to me that the gentlemen of the Press do not have more self-respect than to indulge in flings which can only be founded in justice, upon the idea that their profession is beneath the notice and respect of scholars and statesmen. If Mr. Everett had taken a large fee to manage an intricate law case, we do not imagine that the bar would have thought that in so doing he had made any sacrifice of dignity. Or if—as he was formerly a clergyman—he again accepted a parish settlement, would the minister have thought he had done anything out of character that looked surprising or remarkable? The editorial profession is at least on a par with either of those mentioned, and he is unworthy of being connected with it who thinks it derives any peculiar honor even from the accession to it of the ex-Unitarian clergyman, Edward Everett. I presume that the unfriendly criticisms of many of my editorial friends upon the connection of Mr. Everett with the New-York Ledger were dictated by a desire to hit that paper. Still, it is nevertheless true that their remarks were a reflection upon the dignity of their calling; at least so it will be understood by the great mass of the reading public. The editors of the country have always been a self-sacrificing class, and have put too modest and humble an estimate upon its importance."

From the Taunton (Mass.) Democrat.

MR. EVERETT AND THE NEWSPAPERS.—The editor of the Boston Herald, like a sensible man, thinks Mr. Everett has done a sensible and honorable thing by renewing his connection with the newspaper press. Mr. Everett certainly holds it in his power to exercise an extraordinary influence through the medium of the newspaper to which he becomes a contributor; and who doubts that his influence will be excited in a wise, patriotic and elevating direction?

From the Hartford Daily Press, Dec. 11.

SUCCESS OF A HARTFORD BOY.—The recent payment of ten thousand dollars to Hon. Edward Everett, for the Mount Vernon Association, as remuneration for a series of articles for the New-York Ledger, has turned public attention to the paper in which they are to be published, and to the wonderful success of its proprietor, Mr. Robert Bonner, who is able so munificently to compensate literary labor.

We speak of Mr. Bonner as a Hartford boy, which, in a business point of view, he is, although not born here. He came to this city when about fifteen years of age, and shortly after became a fellow apprentice with one of the publishers of this paper, at the Courant office in this city. This was in 1839. He was a faithful apprentice, always at his post during working hours, taking an interest in the business of the office, and cheerfully discharging whatever duties were assigned him. He was a good printer and an unusually quick compositor, and enjoyed the respect of his fellow workmen and the confidence and esteem of his employer, the late Mr. Boswell. His leisure was hours, in a great measure, were spent in improving his mind, and occasionally articles from his pen found their way into the columns of the Courant, and we believe, also, into some of the other city papers, secular and religious. The intimacy of apprenticeship days between the writer and Mr. Bonner has never been interrupted, and many incidents connected with his success have from time to time been told us. Some of these will interest the public, as well as show what energy, tact and a high regard for principle, will accomplish. We write without Mr. Bonner's knowledge, and may possibly err in publishing what was related to us in the confidence of personal friendship.

Soon after attaining his majority he removed to New-York, where for a time his fortune varied but little from that of journeymen printers generally. He was industrious and economical, saving a little from his weekly earnings. His contributions to the columns of the paper upon which he was employed were frequent, and his employer, appreciating his services, advanced him from position to position, until he became regularly connected with its editorial department.

In 1848, he purchased, for a small consideration, the Merchant's Ledger, a paper published at the low price of fifty cents a year, the design being to secure a large circulation, and a corresponding amount of advertising at remunerative prices. It was designed mainly for merchants, and special efforts were made to secure accurate market reports, and other information in which they were interested. Taeir families were not forgotton, however, and several columns of useful reading, judiciously chosen were weekly given. Mr. Bonner's energy soon added largely to its subscription list and advertising patronage, and the paper yielded handsome profits. At this time he was the New-York correspondent of papers in Boston, New-Orleans, and other places. Some one, anonymously at first, proposed to furnish similar letters for the Courant. A few were forwarded as samples, and as they were unusually spicy for such correspondence, an arrangement was made for their continuance, at a fixed price per letter. The publishers were not a little astonished to find that their author was none other than the graduates of the office.

A business that would have satisfied many, only spurred Mr. Bonner to greater exertions. He soon enlarged his paper and doubled the subscription price, increasing, at the same time, its value, so as to retain its patrons and secure new ones. At this time "Fanny Fern" was prominently before the public, having just published her Ruth Hall, which made a great stir in the literary world. Mr. Bonner, believing that her pen would add to the interest of his paper and increase its circulation, wrote to her, offering $25 a column for a story. It was declined. He increased the offer to $50 a column. It was declined. Again he wrote, increasing the offer to $75 a column. Another declinature followed, but her admiration for the "pluck" of one who seemed determined to secure her services, cost what it would, induced her to send her business agent to soe what manner of man Mr. Bonner was. This interview resulted in Mr. B.'s increasiug the amount to $100 a column. This offer was finally accepted, and the "card" worked precisely as Mr. Bonner anticipated. The fact that "Fanny Fern" was writing far the Ledger a one hundred dollar a column story, was published far and near. and orders for papers literally poured in, and continued to do so during its publication, which was continued for several weeks. Other arrangements were subsequently made with "Fanny Fern," who is still one of the regular weekly contributors to the Ledger.

Mr. Bonner, not content to stop here, was on the lookout for additional attractions. Sylvanus Cobb, whose stories were very popular, was writing for Ballou's Pictorial. Their moral tone and dramatic interest attracted Bonner's notice, and he determined to secure the author's talent for the Ledger. After ascertaining that his pen was not exclusively engaged by any other paper, and that he could honorably accept a commission, Mr. B. offered him double the sum (whatever it might be) that he was then receiving for a story. The offer was accepted, and now for nearly three years Mr. Cobb has written exclusively for the Ledger.

The character of the paper having been somewhat changed by the exclusion of advertisements, and its circulation largely increased, the jealousy of a Philadelphia cotemporary was manifested, and after a very annoying attack upon Mr. Bonner, he resolved to punish them—not by a public reply, but depriving them of their chief writer, Mrs. Southworth. He accordingly visited Georgetown, her residence, and after ascertaining that her engagement was such that she could honorably make a change, told her that, without knowing what she was receiving in Philadelphia, he would double her compensation. This was an argument she could not well resist, and Bonner came away with "documents" in his pocket.

Distinguished writers in other departments of literature have from time to time been added to his corps. He recognizes the fact that newspaper readers are not all Everetts, or Cobbs, or Fanny Ferns, and hence the varied talent called to his assistance. He believes in employing the best writers, and in liberally compensating them. His last great stroke is in engaging the Addisonian pen of Mr. Everett. Leaving out of view the fact that the sum paid is for the benefit of an object which has enlisted the sympathies of thousands, the compensation is greater than has ever before been paid for a series of newspaper articles. The arrangement is mutually advantageous—Mr. Bonner securing valuable contributions and increasing the literary reputation of his paper, while the Mount Vernon Society secures a large addition to its treasury. The Ledger claims a circulation of three hundred thousand copies, and as five readers to each copy is not an extravagant average, Mr. Everett brings his mind in contact with a million and a half of persons weekly, exerting an influence greater than it is possible for him to do through any other channel. His engagement is only a part and parcel of the progressive policy Mr. Bonner has pursued from the first, and that it will be pecuniarily profitable we have not a doubt. What the next great stroke will be, time must determine. That it will come is as certain as that Mr. Bonner lives.

In his business Mr. Bonner has always pursued the cash plan—owing no one over a Saturday night, and allowing no one to owe him. Profits are not swallowed up in bad debts, and he has already "salted down," outside his business, a handsome fortune. When in New-York, some months since, the writer asked him why he did not sell out his business and live like a prince, if it suited his fancy. Mr. B. inquired what amount of money would satisfy us, and upon a moderate sum being named, exhibited securities for several times its amount, remarking that he must have some business to occupy his mind, and if the earth should open and swallow up his whole establishment, he still had enough left, as he had shown us. He thought, therefore, that he might as well publish the Ledger as any one else.

Mr. Bonner has been called the "prince of advertisers." The Newspaper Press has certainly no reason to complain of his use of that agency. There are but few papers in the Union that have not advertised for him in one shape or another. At one time he directs a part of a story to be sent to every daily paper in the United States—at another to every weekly paper where there is not a daily connected with it. Within a year, upon commencing a new story, he paid for printing and distributing handbills and posters, seven thousand dollars. At another time he paid $2,000 for eight pages in a New-York paper for a single day. Some months his advertising (which is nearly all done through the reliable, energetic, prompt-paying house of S. M. Pettingill & Co.) amounts to over twenty-five thousand dollars, and they have had Mr. Bonner's check at one time for nearly that amount. While he has found his profit in the expenditure of such large sums, there are, even in this nineteenth century, merchants who look upon advertising as a humbug.

Some of the papers which have noticed the recent engagement of Mr. Everett have spoken contemptuously of the Ledger—they certainly cannot be its readers. Its publisher aims, and always has aimed, to give it the very highest moral tone, and admits nothing into its columns which does not inculcate the purest morality—nothing which cannot be read aloud in any family without having to hesitate and stumble over doubtful sentences. And this is done from principle as well as interest. When Mr. Bonner first went to New-York, as a journeyman, he peremptorily refused employment in any office where he was required to work on the Sabbath. His fellow workmen jeeringly told him that with such scrupulous notions he never could do anything in New-York, where all the daily papers require their compositors to work on that day. He promptly replied that if he could not earn his living at his profession without violating the Sabbath, he would at once change his business. When an apprentice, even, he took a lively interest in the religious and benevolent associations of the day. We well recollect an incident, which, though small, shows his feeling at that time. Mr. Bonner was a member of Dr. Hawes' Church, and an agent for one of the missionary societies was one day in the office making collections. The foreman, who proposed to give $5, thought Mr. B. with one or two other apprentices might well give two dollars each. He inquired of the foreman if he would give double the sum he (Mr. B.) would contribute, and upon receiving an affirmative response, immediately put down his name for eight dollars, which was certainly liberal, considering that it was nearly a fourth of his annual salary. The same respect for religious institutions was carried to New-York, where he has been prominently connected with the Westminster church. A single inciden tells its own story. The church was embarrassed by a heavy debt, and other societies had offered it sixteen thousand dollars on condition that its own members would raise the balance. Every string had been pulled and between two and three thousand dollars remained. On a Sabbath afternoon the pastor made a last appeal and urged his congregation to meet on the next evening and see if the proposed aid could not be secured—hoping almost against hope that a few hundred dollars might then be raised. As the pastor descended from the pulpit Mr. Bonner met him, and told him that he should be unable to be present at the proposed meeting, but that whatever the deficiency might be, if he would call at his office the succeeding morning, he would give him his check for the amount. These incidents show the principles and kindness of heart of the man, and in conducting his paper he aims to act in accordance with them.

We have said that Mr. Bonner has claimed for the Ledger a weekly circulation of three hundred thousand copies. We know it is much greater. To print this enormous edition, eight power presses run twenty-three hours out of the twenty-four—a breathing spell of only half an hour being allowed between 12 and 1 o'clock at noon and at midnight. His weekly bill for white paper alone is not far from $5,000. Each number is electrotyped four times—one set of the plates being preserved for printing back numbers—the calls for which are so great as to give constant employment to one press.

We have occupied more space in detailing these incidents than we intended. There are but few instances of such success on record, and the steps by which it has been achieved may serve as hints to others. Industry, perseverance, energy, moral principle and correct business habits, lie at the foundation—on these a superstructure has been reared whose proportions astonish all, and probably none more that Mr. Bonner himself.

From the Long Island Journal.

Mr. Robert Bonner, of the Ledger, is the prince of newspaper publishers. He startled the world by paying Fanny Fern $100 per column, and now he doubles upon the till now unprecedented price, and pays the Hon. Edward Everett $200 per article, not for a few times, but for an entire year.

Our readers are well aware that Mr. Bonner has given Mr. Everett the munificent sum of $10,000, to be devoted to the Mount Vernon Fund, for fifty-two articles, to be published in the Ledger the coming year under the title of "Mount Vernon Papers." Since the days of the Spectator and Addison, never has there been such a treat offered to the many as Mr. Bonner will furnish for his five hundred thousand readers.

We advise all our readers to subscribe for the Ledger for 1859, assuring them that they will be amply repaid.

Never, again, probably, will they have the opportunity to purchase the productions of the ripest scholar of the age at so cheap a rate.

From the Newark Daily Advertiser.

MR. EVERETT AND THE LEDGER.—* * * Literature is a republic, or rather a democracy. Every one stands on the same level. Shirt sleeves are as good as lawn. There is no privileged place or class; lords as well as laborers have become lecturers. This is not theory, but fact. Every man's works appear everywhere, are printed on the same paper, by the same types, are scattered abroad, and read like every other man's works. There is no presidency, ambassadorship, or secretaryship in literature. Brougham, though a lord and once a lord chancellor, never did a more praiseworthy act than in writing for the Penny Magazine. United States Senators, presidents of colleges, and learned Greek scholars, have been Sunday School teachers in the same school where milliners and madames mingle as instructors with clergymen and colliers. Is any man or office tabooed, is any man too high, or too sacred to walk with the clean or dirty multitude in the street, to ride in an omnibus, or worship God on Sundays in a pew next to that of a male or female story-writer? Has Mrs. Sigourney been all the time heaping disgrace upon her head by contributing her pure poetry to Bonner's Ledger?

We have never read a number of the Ledger, and have taken the report of others, so we ask for information, if anything worse has been printed in its columns than in the political papers, where slander, vulgarity, filth and immorality have not been infrequent ingredients in many an article? We close by asking a question, and that is, which is better, to send an essay to a paper which contains stories, poems and other writings, by such persons as Sigourney, Fanny Fern, Cobb and Bennett, or to appear before them in person, and speak to them and others of an exceedingly miscellaneous description at the Academy of Music, Niblo's Garden, and the sixty or seventy other places where Mr. Everett has delivered his grand Oration upon Washington?

From the Hartford Daily Courant.

When it was first announced that Bonner, of the New-York Ledger, had paid the Hon. Edward Everett $10,000 to write for his paper one year, one article weekly, there was a disposition on the part of some of the editorial fraternity to sneer at the Ledger, and at Everett for writing for it, while others spoke approvingly, admitting the fact that it was a master-stroke of Bonner's, and an act on the part of Everett, in accepting the offer, deserving of enthusiastic praise. Since the first excitement following the announcement that the Hon. Edward Everett was to write for the Ledger, the general tone of the Press has been that of commendation. We do not doubt but that the result of this bold move of Bonner's will be to largely increase the already immense circulation of the Ledger. But we have no idea that Bonner will stop where he is, but that before long we shall hear of other talented writers of note being engaged by him to write for his columns; for he is one of those indefatigable, go-ahead men, never satisfied with the present, but constantly aiming at something beyond—one who fears nothing or nobody, but marches steadily on to the sure accomplishment of whatever he undertakes, knowing no such word as fail.

From the Fishkill (N. Y.) Standard.

UNEXAMPLED LIBERALITY.—Bonner, the enterprising publisher of the Ledger, has made the magnanimous proposal to Edward Everett that, in consideration of his furnishing an article weekly for that paper for one year, he would pay him the sum of $10,000, and in the same noble spirit which has distinguished that great man, heretofore, particularly in his efforts to aid in the Washington Monument undertaking, he has accepted the offer, the money has been paid, and in a manner worthy of all commendation, the entire sum has been handed over to the "Monument Association." Such noble generosity is beyond all praise; and while we know that Mr. Everett is not profited at all thereby, even if the Ledger should find profit in it, which we trust it may, it is a generous, a princely act on the part of the publisher.

From the Winsted County Herald.

The whole history of advertising (which, by the way, is an invention entirely modern, it having been pursued scarce a hundred years as yet) affords no more noteworthy success than has attended Robert Bonner and his New-York Ledger. A few years ago Bonner was but a compositor, a young man, in the Courant office at Hartford. Whether the Ledger was in existence at that time we don't know or care—very few had ever heard of such a paper when he took hold of it. He began advertising and the dollars rolled in. Few, at first, stuck in his fingers,—he kept working the advertising mine. Bonner has been at it for three years or so. He is now unquestionably worth $300,000 as the reward of his spirit and sagacity, and his Ledger is daily securing a better and more substantial footing. The "last card" of the successful and greatest advertiser of the age, is the employment of Edward Everett, the most accomplished scholar of the New World, to write an article each week for the coming year for his paper."

From the Somerville (N. J.) Messenger, Nov. 18, 1858.

BONNER FOREVER!—Edward Everett has agreed with Robert Bonner, the publisher of the New-York Ledger, to furnish for that paper weekly for the term of one year, an original article, in consideration of the sum of $10,000, to be appropriated to the Mount Vernon Association. The following correspondence between the parties will sufficiently explain the matter. Bonner is certainly a wide awake genius, and deserves the appellation which has been given him of the "Napoleon of the Press,"

From the Norfolk Day Book.

ADVERTISING EXTRAORDINARY.—R. Bonner, editor of the New-York Ledger, who has probably paid more money for advertising than any man now living, still adheres to the custom, having lately paid the snug little sum of ten thousand dollars in advance, for the services of the Hon. Edward Everett, as contributor for one year to his Ledger; the services required being very slight, indeed. Mr. Bonner appears to understand the importance of advertising about as well as any one we ever heard of, as by that means he has built up a circulation for his paper greater than any weekly paper ever published in this country, or probably in the world. We commend his course to many of our city merchants.

From the Watertown (N. Y.) Journal.

Considerable interest has been excited in the literary world by the great coup de main of the renowned Bonner, in securing Everett as a stated contributor to his paper by the offer of $10,000 cash, to be applied to the Mount Vernon fund. Mr. Everett has devoted himself with untiring zeal and disinterestedness to the work of redeeming the home of Washington, and he had already received the thanks of every patriot in the land. Mr. Bonner has simply done a smart thing for himself and his paper. No other weekly paper in the country can boast of a weekly contributor from a man of his position in the literary world.

From the Windham (N. Y.) Journal.

Robert Bonner, of the New-York Ledger, has engaged Edward Everett to write a weekly article for his paper for one year. The correspondence in relation to the matter is published, by which it appears that Mr. Bonner proposed to make a donation of $10,000 to the Mount Vernon Fund, if Mr. Everett would write as above. The latter gentleman accepted the proposition, and it speaks well for his patriotism. But the idea is a novel one—an ex-Foreign Minister, ex-Secretary of State, and the leading scholar and orator of the nation, writing "regularly for the New-York Ledger!"

From the Meadville (Penn.) Journal.

Mr. Bonner, publisher of the New-York Ledger, has, through the Hon. Edward Everett, made a donation of ten thousand dollars to the Mount Vernon Fund, on condition that that distinguished gentleman will contribute an article every week for one year to the paper in question! Mr. B. will more than double his investment.

From the Philadelphia Daily Press.

Certainly the New-York Ledger is one of the peculiar institutions of the country, and a phenomenon in the world of newspapers. It is printed by hundreds of thousands, and goes to the Post-office by cartloads. Eight power presses running twenty-three hours out of twenty-four, are kept unceasingly going, throwing off its sheets; and frequently the extra demand is so great that presses are employed in other establishments to supply it. The Everett movement is bringing, as might have been expected, new subscriptions by thousands. The present circulation of the Ledger is 340,000. Within the year past Mr. Bonner has expended over $100,000 in advertising. To supply the circulation requires the weekly consumption of over seven hundred reams of paper. Sixty thousand copies are sent out in small packages by mail. News agents are supplied through Ross & Tousey. The net cash profits of the Ledger are understood to be not less than twenty-five hundred dollars per week. And all this may be set down as the result of energy, enterprise and advertising.

From the Jamestown (N. Y.) Journal.

One of the celebrities of the age, one of the shrewdest advertisers of the country, is RobertBonner, of the New-York Ledger. He is the standing reproach of those dreaded folks who say, "advertising is all humbug," "nothing but the silly fancy of newspaper editors." To-day he gives a thousand dollars for a column in a daily paper. To-morrow he doubles the amount, and calls the price cheap, and the result magnificent. No paper has such a remunerative circulation. It is a complete triumph of the maxim, "Advertise."

Bonner's latest device is the enlistment of the orator, Edward Everett, as one of his weekly contributors. How was it done? Bah! he gave his check for $10,000 to the Mount Vernon Fund, Everett's great scheme to buy the home of Washington. So that Edward Everett "writes for the New-York Ledger." The fact is (let business men note it), a generous advertising pays.

From the Augusta (Ga.) Chronicle and Sentinel.

MOUNT VERNON PAPERS FOR THE NEW-YORK LEDGER—CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN EDWARD EVERETT AND MR. BONNER.—The correspondence speaks for itself; but such a remarkable instance of liberality and enterprise on the part of Mr. Bonner, and of such continuous self-sacrificing devotion to the noble object of the Mount Vernon Association on the part of Mr. Everett, demands special notice. Many have supposed that he circulation of the New-York Ledger was already so immense that no additional attractions could be of any benefit to it; but Mr. Bonner's ambition as a journalist evidently knows no limit, and he spares no labor or expense to aggrandize his most brilliantly-successful paper. We all know with what generous perseverance Mr. Everett has traveled over the country delivering his eloquent and masterly oration on Washington wherever a multitude could be gathered to contribute to the Mount Vernon fund; and it greatly adds to the debt of gratitude due to him from the ladies of the Mount Vernon Association, that, for the sake of contributing still further aid to their enterprise, he has assumed for a whole year the burdensome task of writing for a newspaper.

From the Susquehanna Pennsylvanian.

SUPERFICIAL JUDGMENT.—Robert Bonner has placed $10,000 at the disposal of the Hon. Edward Everett, to be appropriated to the patriotic and benevolent enterprise to which he is devoted heart and soul, viz: the purchase of Mount Vernon, in consideration for which Mr. Everett is to contribute weekly to the New York Ledger.

Shallow philosophers, so plenteous, who talk much and think little, opine that Everett, in contributing to the Ledger, derogates from his dignity as a man of letters and a statesman. When is a scholar and a statesman more than a man? When does a man arrive at a height too sublime to make use of an opportunity to do great good to his fellows? When does a man become too exalted to dispense knowledge? We have not yet learned of an answer to these questions.

From the Rockville (Md.) Journal.

Mr. Bonner, the enterprising publisher of the New-York Ledger, has entered into a contract with the Hon. Edward Everett to contribute a series of letters for the columns of his paper, for which he has agreed to pay the sum of $10,000 towards the purchase of Mount Vernon. Such liberality on the part of Mr. Bonner can only be exceeded by his spirit of enterprise.

The already unprecedented popularity of the Ledger will no doubt be greatly increased by the acquisition of so invaluable a contributor as Mr. Everett, whose name is familiar, even to children, in the remotest parts of this vast Republic, and whose unselfish devotion and patriotic efforts to build up his home to the memory of the immortal Father of his country has won for him the esteem of every American.

UNEXAMPLED LIBERALITY.—Bonner, the enterprising publisher of the Ledger, has made the magnanimous proposal to Edward Everett that, in consideration of his furnishing an article, weekly, for that paper for one year, he would pay him the sum of $10,000, and in the same noble spirit which has distinguished that great man heretofore, particularly in his efforts to aid in the Washington Monument undertaking, he has accepted the offer, the money has been paid, and, in a manner worthy of all commendation, the entire sum has been handed over to the "Monument Association." Such noble generosity is beyond all praise, and while we know that Mr. Everett is not profited at all thereby, even if the Ledger should find profit in it, which we trust it may, it is a generous, a princely act on the part of the publisher. The title of the articles will be "The Mount Vernon Papers," and they will, no doubt, appear very soon.

EDWARD EVERETT "WRITES FOR THE NEW-YORK LEDGER."—Mr. Bonner, of the New-York Ledger, some few days since, offered the Hon. Edward Everett $10,000 in aid of the Mount Vernon Fund, on condition that Mr. Everett should write every week for the Ledger for one year. Mr. Everett accepted the offer, the $10,000 has been paid, and Mr. Everett, therefore, "writes for the Ledger." The arrangement is, undoubtedly, shrewd on the part of Mr. Bonner, and will pay, while it benefits the character of his paper. As for Mr. Everett, his action in the matter elevates him in the eyes of every thoughtful man. He is a warm admirer of the virtues of Washington, while his talents are devoted without reward, except the gratitude of the nation, to preserving as a national legacy, the former home and tomb of the great American warrior and statesman. In the engagement concluded between Mr. Everett and Mr. Bonner, we see no occasion for satire nor light remark. Both are influenced by honorable motives, and are equally entitled to credit.
